It appears that the real and perexcited multitude to enter by the foundry sonal property in the United States has on the river front. Several medical men been valued upon twelve occasions, at inwere among the visitors vesterday, and extervals between 1790 and 1878- each valpressed great astonishment at the marvelous sight.

This morning doctors Carrick and Wood two well-knows surgeons, made a close exmination of the lacerated neck and the lifeless head, imbued with that shope . that they would be able to solve the mystery by shoots to larger pots. Little tired-looking had not increased during a hundred years the discovery that the base of the brain had left on the trunk, to prolong animal life, but their examination was in vain, mystifying them even more, as they discovered that the entire head and part of the neck was entirely gone, and that the lower jaw was hanging on a simple ligsment, and held in place by the tongue, which is extriordinary tough and hard. While making the examination the dog was very restless land endevored to free himself from the grin of the doctors. We are impressed with the belief that the question which so long has baffled science in determining the function of animal brain is answered. We think the fact of the dog living after the seperation of the brain from the body proves that animal brain is a mere form of matter, no more capable of impression than the tail, probadly one of the orgams of digestion . In man it is the motor power of thought and action. It is certainly a nut for physicians to crack. Colonel Dumont will give such ample privilege to investigate for the benefit of science. Colonel Dumont thinks be has an elephant on his hands : he does not want to kill the dog, and yet hates to see it live in such a disfigured condition. Speculators desire to exhibit it, to which he objects. George Forepaugh, the showman, yesterday offered $1,000 for the dog,or $300 s day, which col. Dumont refused, It is certainly a very lively specimen of canine even if it has no head.

On the ground at our feet, sitting upon his haunches, was a little black-an-tan dog, the pet of colonel Dumont's household jaw and tongue, was entirely gone, revealing the raw and ragged edges of the neck, out of which protruded as unusally large and ill-formed windpipe, which may possibly account in some way for the prolonged existence of the dog. Moving nearer, to take a closer look at the animal we were shocked to see him get down on his feet and instinctively run to his master's side, as if fearing harm. We shuddered at the sight of an animal headless and sightless seeking his master for protection ; it seemed incredible, and we almost doubted we were awake but we were, and the most wonderful par of the phenomenon was to be witnessed,
