SOME ACCOUNT OF SUSSIAN PRISON. Louis No.

The London Globe says?

The Tower of London and Westminister Alibey arouse to the minds of most Englishmon very much the same sort of interest. They are both to be regarded with affectionats reverance as memorators of a past that cannot be recalled. To repeat the dramas that were unacted in the old fortress, that were a paince and prison in one, or to repeople its narrow cells, is, we fool, as impossible as to give life to the dry bones of our departed kings and queens, poets and politicians. We have got to essociate state prisone such as the tower with an almost medineval age, with jun is and tornaments and knight errantry. With us they went outor at any rate the horror and romance of them went out-with rugs and trunk hose, and habeas corpus, which unlocked the doors of the white tower, and made it impossible to pack off people to the "Little his lost property at any cost. An official, East" without rhyme or reason, seeme to us high in authority, came to a police officer uncomantiz matter-of-fast Englishmen of with the complaint that he had been robed the present day as the work of another age ; of a packet-book containing 2,000 roubles to divide us, as it were, from another Eng- in bank notes. He could give no further land. In Russia, the contemplation of a state prison suggests no reflections of this a rel pocket book, nor could he even be cernature. A Moscovite, with a historical bent, who meditates outside to e walls of Schlus selbourg or the fortress of Sta, Peter or Paul, may trouble himself with the occupants of these old grim state prisons ; but his thoughts are much more likely to run on property he had lost. The great man was the condition and future of their present ten mis. For there is little to choose between their past and every-day incidents of thals present. The latter are just as terrible having need to take up the paletot he had just as romantic, if we like to use the term, worn, he found between the cost and the as the former. -- on or walls of the fortress of Schlusselbourg and is so venturesome as to ask to be shown the dangeon of little Ivan VI, is as likely as not to be told he cannot see it, because it iat present in the occupation of some prisoners of state. Very few, however outside the circle of those officials whose unpleasant withip the walls of Russian state prison. It which is worth about $1.50 per acre, is as hard to get in (save as a pr soner) as to unlock the gates of a castle in the Arabian Nights without possessing the charm. State prisons in Russia being fortresses as well,application for admission to them has to be made to the minister for war rather than to the minister of justice. This great official is celiar doors be put in level with pavement protty sure to resent to the tourist's curiososity. He will probably tell him that neither Schlusselbourg nor the fortress of Sts. Peter and Paul possess any real interest for the stranger, and if he yields at least to his importunity he will take very good care that he penetrates but a very little way into the secrets they conceal. The commandant of the fortress, to whom the special order for admission is shown, will probably on his log some packages at the post office in Mapart, evince no little reluctance to admit the privileged stranger-tor it need hardly be said that no ordinary tourist is thus honored. And no wouder. Could the stones The boy did so, when the lady moistened of the vaulted passages which echo under mailed it and walked off.) Lem Offutt shot his father-in-law,Richard our tread speak in articulate language they would have a story to tell that might eclipse the romances that gathered round the Bastile or the tower. When Custine visited the forcress of St. Petersburg in 1839 there were unfortunate wretches incarcerated in the dungeons bollowed out under the Neva who with miserable monjiks, charged with having run away from their "lord ;" while at the present time offences against the pass port system are accountable for a large pro portion of those consigned by the authori ties to durance vils. At the Ostrog prison at More or 1.110 persons were at one time described on the prison short as having been confined for being without a passport ; a large number for having lost this most indispensable document; and a hundred of so for having "allowed the period to expire for having their passport revised." But, considering the frequency of petty thefts in Russia, the number of persons confined for these offences seems comparatively small, The middle-class Russian, whose purse has found its way into the fingers of the light fingered gentry, seldom finds redress at the hands of the police; on the other hand the rascal who picks the pockets of a Russian high up so the Tchin does so at his peril. The St. Petersburg sergeant-de-ville, in or der to curry favor with a great man, will find description of his property than that it was tain of the exact number of notes in it. An hour had hardly clapsed when the police officer called upon him, and with a triumphant air announced that he had laid his

The police officer had simply bought a their names on the Tower walls, and ladies new red pocketbook and put 2,000 roubles of high degree were rowed under Traitor's of his own into it, thinking that the protection of so great a man would be cheaply purchased at that price. When Peter III, shortly before his own dethrone ment and assassination, paid him a secret visit in his dungeon, and asked him what he wished for, he answered "to have more nir.21 The emporor, touched by his maving complaint, planned a little circular palace in front of the fortress, in the center of which was to be a garden, so that the boy's craving for light and air should be in some way gratified. The idea, however, was neve carried out, and subsequently it was used by Catharine as an accusation against Peter himself, and was made one pretext for his assassanation. When Peter visited Ivan ha was aged rather more than twenty years and had never seen the light of day since he was fourteen months old. The emperor, according to Baron Korf, who relates the interview, asked him several questions. Among others,"Who are you ?"-"I am the Emperor." "Who put you into prison, then ?"-"Vile, wicked people." "Would you like to be Emperor again ?"-"Why not? I should then have fine clothes and servants to wait on me." "But what would you do if you were Emperor " -- "I would cut off the heads of all those who have wronged me." The idea that one day a conspiracy might reverse position of Inan and Catharine the continually haunted the Empress ; and the guard of Schlusselbourg were furnished with orders to put the boy to death if any attempt should be made to convoy him away. This order was carried into effect when the conspirator Mirovitch forced his way into the dungeon. He was confronted with the blesding body of the murdered prince.
