known to him, but he had lived so long away from Paris that he couldn't remember who she was. And soon as he entered the club room he sought for in formation. "The Bassino," said he, "do you know a Mme. de Belroy?" "Yes," replied the gentleman, "she that was little De St. Saome, Poor Belroy died last year, and she is plunged in grief. It was a great loss."

"No," his wife who is charming, but is always invisible. Society sees her no more. Merisi now waited anxiously for another find in the coupe. But alas! for a whole week neither notebook nor anything else was forgotten. But the little "saint," who was so very busy, had occupied his mind incessantly. So he said one evening to the coachman: "I have discovered that my coupe is also used by Mme. de Belroy. Do not deny it. I am sure. Now, I am curious to see this lady. Tell me where I might do so."

"Well, sir, every morning at nine o'clock I take her to mass at the Church of St. Philippe." "Next morning M. de Merisi was punctual, and saw his saint at her devotions. It seemed to him that never before had he seen her so lovely, and especially so still in mourning. She was seated in a velvet chair, with a large black velvet bonnet of black tulle, which framed her lovely blonde hair; a long veil of black gauze hung down on the train of her dress, which was of dead black silk, trimmed with black surah. In her black gloves she held a small fan, and in her pictures and illuminated texts. Merisi paid little attention to the mass.

"Ah," thought he, "if I had known there was on earth such a woman—beautiful, young, modest and shunning society—I would have adored her. How gracefully she makes the sign of the cross. She is a little saint. But that Juliette—who the deuce can she be?" From that moment Monsieur de Merisi hung upon her steps. He saw her every morning at the church of St. Philippe, and followed her to her house in the Rue de Valenciennes. He saw her every day, and he saw her every day. He saw her every day, and he saw her every day. He saw her every day, and he saw her every day.

Every one in Paris knows Darley, the lively stable keeper. His establishment is now half a century old, and he furnishes the Parisian aristocracy with all the carriages they hire. Many of the upper ten have their homes in the country, and never take their horses to Paris. Therefore, Monsieur de Merisi, immediately after his arrival, went to see Darley to engage a coupe. "After the usual salutations, the following dialogue began: "Well, Darley, I want a handsome coupe, with one horse; now how much will it be?" "What will the amount of work be, sir?" "Oh, not very much. I never want it before 5 in the afternoon. I will have a few visits, and take a drive in the park. In the evening I want it to take me to the theatre or home from the club."

Darley reflectively scratched his head. "Well, how much a month do you want for it?" "Hum—let me see. For a new coupe and a good horse in May, the busiest month—50 francs is cheap." "What! from 5 o'clock to midnight or 1 o'clock in the morning?" "You must remember that during the remainder of the year I can't use either the coupe or the horse." "Well, let me see, 70 francs; that's handsome pay for so little work." "All right," grumbled Darley. "Same price, I suppose."

"Well, I'll send it around to-morrow." An hour later Darley received, with the utmost respect, an important customer, Mmc. de Belroy. "Well, madame, what can I do for you? Carriage, eh? Well, let me recommend a landau—a landau that's made to the order, and is the best of its kind." "No, sir; as you see, I am yet in mourning, and come to Paris only to settle some affairs." "But madame will pardon me if I say that in a coupe her beauty—"

"No, Monsieur Darley, I am a widow, and I live in the country. I want a carriage only for my shopping and such things; a coupe with one horse, elegantly lined, but dark. How much will it be per month?" "That depends upon the work." "Oh, it will not be much. At 9 o'clock I will drive to mass; after breakfast I shall have a call to make, and shopping to do; at 3 o'clock I shall drive home. This is all, for I never go out in the evening." "Well, madame, during May, our business month, the price is 700 francs a month."

"That's much, I think. It seems to me that 600 francs." "Come, madame, I have something that will just suit you; something very elegant but quiet-lined with silk—"

"Why, Julius," said she, patting his cheek, "what's the matter?" "Julius!" roared the discomfited lover, "is this Julius?" "Yes, he is my godson, a poor orphan. By-and-by I shall tell you all about his mother, and the trouble I had to be appointed his guardian, and how I used to go and see him at the Boulevard St. Michel, where he lived. Now, Julius, go and kiss Monsieur de Merisi, who, I am sure, will be very kind to you—if he loves me truly."

Monsieur de Merisi did love her truly. He loved her so truly that he would have died rather than tell her that he had doubted her. And she does not know it to this day. —La Vie Parisien.

The Career of a Bandit. The steamer City of New Orleans arrived in New York on the morning of July 12th, having on board Giuseppe Esposito, alias Radazzo, a noted Italian gang leader, and especially his native country some years ago, and has since been living in New Orleans, where he was recently captured at the instance of the Italian Consul. He is charged with a terrible catalogue of crimes. He was chief of a band of robbers who infested the island of Sicily, and especially the neighborhood of Palermo, robbing, murdering and holding captured travelers for ransom. When the carriage passed from the wharf out of the gate into West street, such cries as "The infernal bandit!" "See the murderer!" "He ought to be hanged!" were heard from a crowd of longshoremen who were waiting for admission to begin unloading the steamer. The prisoner was in the custody of Detective James Mooney and an assistant, who were sent to New Orleans by the Italian Charge d' Affaires.

His height is five feet seven inches and weight one hundred and seventy pounds. He had on a dark, heavy, well-made, salt-colored suit well worn, a blue check muslin shirt and a solid and broken Panama hat. He looked like the average street vendor of fruit. There is nothing in his appearance to indicate that he is a man of brutal passions, whose hands have been stained with human blood, and who, as the leader of a band of banditti, created terror throughout a large part of Italy.

The accounts of Esposito's career as a bandit are somewhat conflicting, but they agree in the main facts. For about six years preceding the year 1874 a noted band of robbers infested the island of Sicily and especially the neighborhood of Palermo, robbing, murdering and holding captured travelers for ransom. The band was for years known as Leone's, from the name of its chief, Leone Grillo, a lion of about three miles north of the Italian authorities that he was forced to take refuge in Algeria, where it is said he was killed in a drunken brawl. Esposito was born in Palermo, and at an early age ran away and joined his band. Leone liked him, and in time made him his lieutenant. Leone died, and Esposito became the head of the band, and in a little time gained almost as bad a notoriety as Leone himself. The charges against Esposito are: First, with being a member of an outlawed band; second, with having extorted by violence 250,000 lire; third, with having committed violence of various kinds; fourth, with having committed murder; fifth, with having committed robbery; sixth, with having committed extortion; seventh, with having committed violence of 30,000 lire. In the latter case the victim died, after a release, through his injuries. In the eighth place, Esposito is charged with the murder of a man named Villaparte, who was nicknamed the "Elite Directory."

"Do you know the Belroy family, Villaparte?" "Very well, indeed; but there's not many left—only the grandmother and daughter-in-law." "Hum—not easily; the grandmother is 80 years old; the young widow is nearly 40 years in the country and lives very retired since the death of her husband." "Come, now, as a great favor to me," "But at once, because I'm going to go away." "Well, I'll go to-morrow and see the grandmother."

"Are you acquainted with the young widow, too?" "I know her ever since she was born, my dear lady; a handsome, distinguished and graceful woman." "And she is—hum—never been any scandal about her, has there?" "Villaparte arose with such precipitation that he overturned his chair." "What do you mean?" he roared. "Monsieur de Belroy! Why, not a whisper has been heard of her since she was married." "Outwardly discomfited, but inwardly rejoicing, Merisi abused himself before his indignant friend, and finally succeeded in making his peace.

The next morning he again followed the charming widow, who spent her time usually at the stable. She seemed a little longer than usual, and it seemed to him when she came out that her toilet was a little disarranged. Her hair was disheveled, her hat awry, and her collar rumpled. But after some moments of jealous rage, the answer of Monsieur de Merisi came to his mind, and he quickly repented of his distrust. The grandmother had been very amiable, and had given Monsieur de Villaparte permission to present his friend. This was soon done and Monsieur de Merisi fell deeper in love than before, if he was not already so. He had been so successful. He had been so successful. He had been so successful. He had been so successful.

But Esposito did not stay captured. On the way to prison the troops were attacked and fled, and Esposito was free again. A reward of 25,000 lire was offered for his head, but the bandit chief managed to escape, and keeping clear of the Italian authorities, he succeeded in getting to this country. He was for a time lost to sight, but was finally recognized in New Orleans. He had come to this city first, but fearing detection, had made his way to Orleans. There he had purchased a schooner with his ill-gotten gains and was engaged in the fruit trade along the Mississippi river. Being no doubt of the bandit's identity, upon application of Count Marafocchi, the Italian Consul in New York, and Consulport Bros., his counsel, United States Commissioner Osborne, and a fortnight ago, issued a warrant for the arrest of Esposito, which was placed in the hands of two private detectives who went to New Orleans and, acting in conjunction with detectives there, arrested the bandit. They took him on the steamer which left for this country on the following day. When the steamer arrived in New York, Esposito was taken to Ludlow street jail, and later was arraigned at the police court, where he was arraigned at the police court, where he was arraigned at the police court.

I am a Baptist minister, and before I even thought of being a clergyman, I graduated in medicine, but left a lucrative practice for my profession, 40 years ago. I was for many years a sufferer from quinsy. Thomas Electric Oil cured me. I was also troubled with rheumatism, and Thomas Electric Oil always gave me relief. My wife and child are now suffering with rheumatism. I cured them, and if taken in time, will cure seven times out of ten. I am confident it is a cure for the most obstinate cold or cough, and if any one will take a small teaspoon and half fill it with the Oil, and then place the end of the spoon in one nostril and draw the Oil out of the spoon into the head by sniffing as hard as they can, until the oil falls over into the throat, and practice that twice a week, I don't care how offensive their head may be, it will clean it out and cure their catarrh. For deafness and earache, it has done wonders. I can testify to its efficacy. It is the only medicine I have ever felt recommending, and I am very anxious to see it in every place, for I tell you that I would not be without it in my house for any consideration. I can now testify to its efficacy. I can testify to its efficacy. I can testify to its efficacy.

It was a question which would hold out longest, an Arkansas negro murderer in his asservitude of innocence, or the Governor in his determination not to commute the sentence from death to imprisonment for life. The verdict had been found on circumstantial evidence but was unquestionably just. On the other hand the prisoner was most solemn and unshaken in his protestations. On the day appointed for the execution the Governor returned and signed a commutation. At about the same hour, but not quite soon enough to interfere with his good luck, the negro confessed his guilt.
