Poetical. THE HIGHWAY COW.

The line of her back was dusky brown, Her body was lean and her neck was thin.

At the expiration of ten minutes the two gentlemen were so shrouded in smoke that they could not see across the compartment.

But things have an end. The train at last stopped at the expected station.

As they descended in the court-yard, Vaugrier advanced. He pressed Prethibaut warmly by the hand, greeted Boisgibert with less warmth, and bade the servant show the latter gentleman to his room.

"As for my old friend," said he to Prethibaut, "come into the garden, and let me tell you what I have to say."

"What will you follow it?" "Of course, since I ask it."

"But you do not follow any more than you do," Prethibaut always asking advice, they rarely follow it.

"Well, what is it about?" said Prethibaut, "I have nothing to reproach her with."

"But you have something on your mind," said Prethibaut, "I am jealous."

"How do you know?" "I know, because I have seen—"

"Come, now," said Prethibaut, "don't be getting any idiotic ideas into your head. I have nothing to reproach her with."

"Well, that's what I wanted to speak about. The fellow has presumed to address some verses to her."

"What are they about?" "Oh, what all poets write about—moon on the waves, stars, and flowers, gentle zephyrings, gondolas, sympathetic souls, and all sorts of idiotic things."

"Naturally," said Prethibaut, "I might have known that. But how did you come to see this letter?"

"Why, I happened to find it in my pocket," said Prethibaut, "I'm not sure."

"Very well, then. Young Boisgibert will not have us with his company during the shooting season. Here is what you must do, tonight, at dinner, when you see me take a pinch of snuff, strike the table with your fist, and say, in a cavernous voice: 'I would do the same.'"

"Hum," said Vaugrier, "a cavernous voice, a pinch of snuff, and a blow on the table. Why—that's how—"

"Never mind," said Prethibaut, "do as I tell you, old boy, and you're all right."

"That evening were gathered around Vaugrier's festive board eight gentlemen. Six vacant chairs showed that the ladies had left them. Unnumbered empty bottles showed that they were good hunters and true. But one man had attempted to escape and join the ladies. Several times he had tried to move, but Prethibaut would invariably ask, with much kindness, 'Are you not well this evening, sir?' so he was forced to remain."

"Of all the merry crowd, Prethibaut alone seemed preoccupied. There was a gloomy expression upon his face, and it finally attracted attention."

"What's the matter with you to-night, Prethibaut?" asked one of the guests; "you look as if you were at a funeral."

"Pardon me, gentlemen," replied the gloomy one, "there are certain anniversaries in a man's life—but no; the story is not a pleasant one."

"Never mind—what's the odds? Go on and tell it any way," was the cry.

"Very well, gentlemen," said Prethibaut, placing his snuff box on the table before him, and gazing on it with deep melancholy, "I will tell you the story. Thirty-five years ago to-day I was the chief actor in a domestic tragedy."

"For reply Prethibaut favored his friend with a violent kick under the table and went on:

"I was born on the 10th of May, and my life was peaceful and happy. I had a wife whom I adored, a daughter whom I idolized."

"What, you?" hawled Vaugrier. "Yes, went on Prethibaut, giving him another kick: 'My estate was in the hands of a creditor, and my wife, by adjoining my property was that of a man a little younger than I. He was about the same age as Madame Boisgibert, and by the way his name resembled him. Well, we often met, and became friends. I came to my house, and my wife, who was a passionate hunter, accompanied me. One day, as I was about to go out, she said to me: 'You are a little younger than I.
