THE DUEL.

In the year 1801, when the peace of military danger and activity gave place who carried a case under his arm. o habits of idleness and dissipation.

In the early part of the summer, several sacrificed rather freely at the shrine of the jolly god, adjourned towards evening to the Exchange Coffee House, the most noted hotel in the city. They entered singing and shouting in a most tumultuous manner, setting at defiance the rules of propriety and decorum. The youngest of the joyous band, the Baron de V-, who bore the commission of a lieutenant in the army, was about twentyfive years of age, wealthy, handsome and elegantly formed. But his mind did not correspond with his person; he was vain, insolent, self-conceited and presum-When they entered the public room, they observed an individual of small stature, in a dark suit, seated alone at a table. He held in his left hand the journal of the day, while his right hand supported a pipe. He paid but little attention to the entrance of this formidable host of blackguards, scarcely deigning to raise his eyes from the paper he was perusing. The young Baron, doubtless offended at an appearance of indifference which he thought bordered on contempt, approached the man in black, and said, with a smile of bitter irony:

"Ah, my friend, good evening. From your appearance,I should take you to be schoolmaster, or perhaps a tailor. Am

The captain politely saluted the rest of the company, and left the house. With him departed all the gayety of the lientenant. He became thoughtful and taciturn; his mind wandered from the game, and he soon lost more than he had gained. He was unnerved with terror, while reflecting on the conse-quences of his folly. What an advan age must an adversary possess over him who could bear with so much calmness a series of degrading insults, and who could propose a duel with such impertur bable sang troid! Such an antagonist must be singularly endowed with cour age and skill. Such were the ideas that continually passed through his mind.

Let us hope he will Chief Justice seemed at first quite in faver of the defendant, and that gentleman nodded often to his attorney, as first things Congress should do when it much as to say: "It is all right; I have secured the Judge." But as the case went on and it was the province of the Chief Justice to charge the jury, he put the case so strongly for the plaintiff that, to the dismay of Mr. Weller, the jury brought in a verdict for Mr. Nangle without leaving the box, and the Judge certified for immediate execution. When, on his return from Munster Circuit, the learned Judge arrived at Waterpark, his first question was:

"Are the cattle all safe?"

"Perfectly, my lord,"rdplied the stew "Con," said Sir Richard Pyne, putting on his hat, "I'll have to look at them
