Good-bye to Flattery's fawning face, To Grandeur with his wild grimace; To upstart Wealth's averted eye, To supple office, low and high; To crowded halls, to court and street, To frozen hearts and hasting feet; To those who go and those who come, Good-bye, proud world, I'm going home

I go to seek my own bearthstone,

Bosomed in you green hills alone, A secret lodge in a pleasant land,

Whose groves the froite fairles planned, Where arches green the livelong day Echo the blackbird's roundelay, And evil men have never trod A spot that is sacred to thought and God. Oh, when I am safe in my sylvan home, I mock at the pride of Greece and Rome; And when I am stretched beneath the pines, Where the evening star so holy shines, I laugh at the lore and pride of man, At the sophist schools, and the learned clan; For what are they all in their high conceit,

THE OLD WELL. BY CLYDE RAYMOND.

"So you want to know if I ever had romance?" said Aunt Margaret, leanng back in her easy chair, with a mild, swered, pushing the velvet hassock his heart and soul was mine—mine.

Aunt Margaret paused, and the to the bright coal fire. The night was somewhat cold and blustering outside, but that only made bued furniture, its softly-cushioned easy chairs, its glowing fire and shaded astral lamp, look all the more inviting. She was a distant relative who had come to pay us a long promised visit, and from my first glance at her fine, stately figure and her noble, placid countenance, knowing that she had never married, I got the notion into my head that she must have had a romance.

Adays of her youth.

"Yes," she resumed, "our happiness was perfect—far too perfect to last. Our marriage was to take place on Christmas, and after a short wedding to the firm before proceeding to extreme measures. The partner was mysteriously summoned to the clerk's office, some kind was necessary to raise the mourner from his stupor, succeeded, in getting him to talk about the business was to come to us for good the moment through a number of streets convert. Aunt Margaret's room, with its warm-books say, I was young, and considered that mother must have been! Lily was rather prettyunfelgned admiration at the handsome face into which a delicate rose-solor came so brightly at the memory of her girlish loveliness. "You might easily carry off the palm of beauty from us now, if you felt so inclined." She smiled again as she saw how sincere was my tribute to her charms, and resumed her story:

"I had of course my share of admirers among the village youth, and was a great favorite at balls, quilting parties, husking bees, and all the other entertainments of village society; yet I reached the age of 20 heart whole and fancy-free, still keeping house for my widowed father, as I had done almost from childhood, and never caring to

ing how girls in any age of the world could have loved, married and lived happily without ever having known the sunlight of his presence.

"Well, Madge, he came at last," continued Aunt Margaret, with a gentle sigh which seemed to waft her far back into the happy past, "and the to make it more secure, but he neglected it until my prophecy of danger from it was at last fulfilled.

"One dark, starless evening in October, returning from a visit to a neighbor's, I was passing the old well, when suddenly a low groan of agony caught my ear. Instantly I realized the awful truth that some traveler had fallen into stant action, and, leaning over the edge of the black, yawning hole, I called oudly to the person within not to depair, for I would soon bring him assistance. calling wildly at every step for help, I began an eager, trembling search for a rope, which I soon had knotted firmly around a stout, crooked old pear tree standing near the well. Then I called gain to the poor, groaning victim below. I bade him grasp the rope tight-ly and let me pull him up. But it was no use. My only answer was another mean, so low and deep that I thought the poor wretch was dying.

"What to do I did not know. No help had come, and I feared to lose a moment by going after it. But I was young and strong and nerved with the courage of desperation, so I did not hesitate long. How I managed it successfully I never could tell, but I let myself down by the rope until I reached the bottom of that dark abyse and found the helpless being, whom Providence had sent me to rescue, too much injured to move a limb.

"As gently and quickly as I could, in that awful situation, I fastened the rope around his body and lifted him in a more convenient position to be drawn up; then hand over hand, like a sailor, and blistering the skin as I went, I slowly climbed to the top again, where I found my father and two or three anxious neighbors just begining to realize what had occurred. It was well they had come, for my girl's strength, try as I would, could never have drawn

How strange! But was she a good wife to Hugh after that, Aunt Margar et?" I asked, with a girlish curiosity,

"Yes, Madge, I heard of them years afterward, a happy and united family." I have always found strength to be thankful that I helped to reconcile them to each other. My life is flowing peacefully on to the great ocean of eternity, so I am content. But Hugh's last, loving kiss which he gave me so passionately beside the old well, where I risked my life to save his, has never been effaced by the touch of other lips."

Aunt Margaret's story was ended. Aunt Margaret's story was ended. She had never thought of this grand, unselfish act of her life in the light of a romance, but to me it seemed very the arrest of the jealous and wretched

The Supreme Court Shocked. A Dream of Murder.

The Supreme Court of the United go he was "best man" at the mar- States is the embodiment of dignity riage of a friend who afterward proceeded with his bride to a large town in England. The lady posessed great personal charms, and had quite a following of suitors, the most conspicutous of whom was a young chamist to save the embodiment of dignity and ponderous solemnity. The Justices are hedged about by bristling points of etiquette that protect them from ordinary people. Lately the Court observed with uneasiness the most the entire care of the invalid de volved upon myself.

"I need not give you the history of those weeks, Madge, but they were the sweetest I have over known in a construction of the court room without collar or necktie. The marriage, this young man disappeared. made more conspicuous through the for several months till an event hap, fact of his neck being very long and Later in the day he was presented to the Supreme Court by Senator Plumb, and was duly admitted to practice as Mr. Lynn of Allen County, Kansas. The newly admitted Kansas lawyer apto offer me the life which he always declared I had saved, he told us frankly the story of his past.

"He was a young man then—only 27—yet he had already been married and divorced. His young wife had been unfaithful to him, and after bearing with her faults and the disgrace they brought upon his name as long as he could, they were legally separated, and the care of their only child was entrated to him. This child—his little Lily—was a theme of which he never tired. Hour after hour he talked to me of her, praising her beauty and goodness, planning for her fature with us, and begging me, a thousand times over, to love her for his sake.

"But he had no need to ask me that."

The doctor came, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark in the law and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remark her orderi who had sternly refused a lawyer been refreshing, for it had been disturbed by a dream that troubled him. Lynn entered the court room accomturbed by a dream that troubled him. Unsentimental by nature, he tried to a dark, sallow faced man, wore a collaugh the fancy away; but it refused lar about which a black tape was tied. her face, I fancied, the same expression which it must have worn in the lovehead that she must have had a romance. Her hair was still brown and abundant, while her eyes shone clear and blue as a young girl's. And yet Aunt Margaret was well past fifty.

"Well, my dear," she began, smiling softly, "'once upon a time, as the story books say, I was young, and considered to the partner of her own sweet, childish nature.

"She did not look like Hugh, therefore I knew that she must resemble her lost mother; and, if so, how beautiful books say, I was young, and considered to the partner through a number of streets conversing any vow that compels him to assume through a number of streets conversing any vow that compels him to assume through a number of streets conversing familiarly, when all of a sudden the husband found himself grasped by the husband found himself grasped by the arm, and looked round to see his friend gazing eageriy into the window of a shop. appear. The appearance of Lynn before the bar of the Court made a sensation. His general appearance of roughness, his angularity of manner and reckless ease made every one expect some absurd contretemps. He was an object well worth a sketch as he began his argument. His high, white forehead was surmounted by a high peak of dark hair that curled backward. His sharp nose, heavy lips, and pointed brown goatee stood out in bold relief upon a countenance tanned by years of exposure to prairie winds and sun. His shirt was open at the throat, showing a red flannel undershirt. At the wrists the red flannel appeared again in the place of cuffs. The argument was clear, little piece of business. They walked in silence through several streets, and shrewd, and able, but the manner of its delivery was as uncouth and peeuat last reached a police station, which they entered. Behind the desk there stood with his hands in his pockets at times, and then he would bound at the Justices, snapping his bony fingers in their faces as if they were so many jurymen. But the argument came to an end without accident, greatly to leaving the court, he requested the latter to give him some explanation of to either of us, but at last he left the decision of his fate to me. O, child, I never can forget the anguish that filled criminal. The friend at once told his the premises forever, adding "visit the cave on your farm and you will find In the railway carriage he had something to interest you. I shall avage the death of my brother or die in dreamed that he was walking through a large city which he had never visited. At length he came upon a row of the attempt." The receipt for this letter greatly as tonished Colonel Alexander, who called about him a select number of his friends to whom he read the documents and who were as equally astonished. Keeping the matter a secret they left the same evening for a visit to the cave, and entering the same with torches a not thinking how my words might fishy looking eyes. Then the sharp wound the noble heart, until I noticed the slight shudder with which she answered them.

The sequel was plain with torches a strange, wierd sight met their view. First, the skeletons of four horses, evidently left there by the robbers on their last raid, as they still emit an unpleaslast raid, as they still emit an unpleas-ant order. Blankets and mattresses were strewn about promiscuously, together with cooking atensils and a few pieces of furniture. This portion of the cave is perfectly dry and afforded a comfortable abode for the bandits. In a niche in one of the chambers was found a half bushel measure, such as is used by farmers, and in it was found a miscellaneous assortment of valuables, evidently placed there and forgotten by the robbers. Among the assortment were found four diamond rings, two diamond necklaces, nine diamond pins (supposed to be diamonds), thirty gold watches, sixteen plain gold rings, twelve silver watches, and many other articles too numerous to mention, ail of which are locked up in the Sumner De posit Bank, in Gallatin, for indentifi cation .- Gallatin Tennesseean.
