her parlor, and it harmonizes charmingly with the dark beauty of its mistress. The sisters are inseparable, and as happy as two mortals can ever expect to be.

And now at length the last long sorrowful leave-taking came; friend part from friend, brother from brother, parent from child, each from the other, whom they knew in all likelihood they were never to see again this side of the grave.

At last, however, on the 24th of October, the Welcome rounded the capes of Delaware bay, and sailed with even and gentle winds up the broad and beautiful waterway that must have gladdened the eyes of the man to whom it really belonged.

One can picture the scene to one's self, that day in early autumn, when the good ship Welcome, 300 tons burden, Robert Greenway, master, lay at its deck with two consorts, waiting for its cargo of one hundred human beings, with all their hopes and fears, expectations and doubts.

One hundred emigrants entered that good ship Welcome at the town of Deal; only seventy left it at Upland. All alone on the empty ocean, where no aid could be had, and no escape was possible, the small-people, the plague of old times, appeared among the crowded mass of terror-stricken people.
