Outside one of the gates of Rome-the resort of Sunday and holiday-keeping Romans, and, precisely, Porta Pia, through which Victor Emmanuel and his army entered in 1870-there stands, halfway between two wayside eating and drinking houses, a little church, dedicated to St. Agnes, a young virgin martyr, who suffered death rather than be married to the son of the Governor of Rome, who was dying of love for her. She was only thirteen years of age; but girls of that age are women in Italy. So she answered his protestations of love by saying: "I am affianced to him whom angels serve, and whom the sun and moon adore." She was then threatened-says her biographer-with being publicly dishonored in an infamous place, and then to be killed in a most cruel way. "My Divine Spouse," she answered-"the God of purity, whom I serve-will deliver me from your impious designs!" She was then thrown on a burning pile; but, laughing and singing praises to God, she defied the flames, which could not be made to burn her.

She was then made to walk naked through the streets of Rome, and was also exposed in a place of bad repute-the Agoual Cirand covered her like a cloak, and the Governor's son was struck with blindness. At last she was beheaded. The place of bad repute where she was exposed was afterwards transformed into a chapel, and over churches in Rome. It is in this little church that on every anniversary of her death are brought on cushions two little pambs decorated with flowers and ribbons. They are blessed, and then they are taken to the Pope, who sends them to the Convent. of St. Cecilia, where they are shorn of their wool, which is afterwards woven into the palluims worn by the Pope and Cardinals and some of the Archbishops. The Church of St. Agnes, outside the walls, is known by the image of the lamb, which is outside the door. All visitors to Rome make a point of going to see it .- Cor. Commercial

A WOODEN LEG.

The peaceful attractions of Kansas her seasons of strife and trial have passed into history are brilliantly set forth in a special edition of the Wyandotte Herald.

Here is a field for immigrants where millions may find room without overtaxing the resources of nature. The present popula-

State lies like a great field, sloping to the morning sun. Its mean elevation above the sea at its eastern sun is seven hundred and fifty feet, and its western end four thousand feet. Most of its surface is level.

From the Ozark Mountains of Missouri, a chain of hills extends into Kansas, nucking a watershed nearly through the centre of the State, the lands on either side being drained by the Kansas and the Arkausas rivers. Kansas has a healthful climate, and the inhabitants are said to be free from con-coption and malarious diseases, Strong winds sweep over the prairies, keeping them cool even in the hottest season. The State has three roin belts, the eastern, the middle, and the western, the average annual rainfall in these belts being, in the order above named, thirty-seven, twenty-four and nineteen inches. The temperature is subject to great variation. Kansas possesses several kinds of soil, all of which are fertile. In the low river bottoms the fruitful alluvial earth is twenty-five feet deep. The forests grow in belts along the rivers and smaller streams. Grass of good quality grows naturally on the prairies, and cultivated grasses flourish there luxuriantly.

Kansas still has wild buffaloes, wild horses, elks and antelopes. It has also panthers, black bears, and woives. Bituminous coal is mined in Kansas, and there are deposits of lead and zine. Among the importan-natural resources of the State are gypsum

An English naval officer, board the Jason frigate, under the Duke of Clarence, had the misfortune to lose a leg in a hot engagement with the French, and for his bravery, he was promoted to the command of a fine ship. Within six months of the day on which he had denned a wooden leg and returned to duty, he was in battle again, and was again struck by a cannon-ball in that same leg, whereupon two stout seamen picked him up, and called aloud for the surgeon.

"No, no, boys," the captain said, "glee-"The carpenter will answer this which is too good to be forgotten. During a time when an English naval squadron was engaged in the Mediterranean wag of a surgeon wrote a circumstantial and critical account of an operation which he had successfully performed upon the badly fractured leg of an English seaman. He described the fracture-compound and complicated, with much shattering. When the case was brought under his notice, he was utterly opposed to amputation, and conceived the idea of treating it with fresh tarred oakum. He applied it liberally, but carefully, making it into a corded mass, and completely swathing the fractured limb therewith. No other application was resorted to, and the patient was not restricted as to diet. He was allowed to drink his regular allowance of grog, and was quartered with his mess. The first application of the "laid-up" oakum was made on Sun-

The naval surgeon waited until the letters overwhelmed him, and then he wrote another article for the Gazette, this time very short, in which he said: "We beg ten thousand pardons for our neglect on a former occasion. JUVENILE LABOR.

A Massachusetts State officer is about to undertake the enforcement of the law re garding juvenile labor. It provides that no person under eighteen years of age shall work more than ten hours a day in a manufacturing establishment, except in certain specified emergencies; that children between eight and fourteen years of age shall attend some public day school at least twenty weeks in the year; none under ten years may work at all in a factory, and none under fourteen unless able to read and write. Masks of mica are now made by Herr Raphael, of Breslau, for protecting the faces of workmen exposed to intense heat dust, or the funes of noxious chemicals Such for example as metal workers, stone masons, and glass melters. The mask is formed of arched plates of mica, which are quite transparent, and fitted to a metal frame covered with asbestos to render it unattackable by heat or acids. The space between the arched mica and the eyes allows the workman to wear spectacles if his eyesight is bad, or colored shades if the light is strong, without fear of breakage, since mice is a poor conductor of heat.
