THE FATAL EASTER. WILD TALE OF THE MUTUAL HATRED OF

TWO CONVICTS.

I am French by birth, and my name is Francois Theirry. I will not burden you with my early history, but will begin by stating that I was sent to the galleys, and find myself to-day an exile. Branding was not out of date by that time and until my death I shall bear ome fiery letters on my shoulder.

I was arrested, registered, condemned and sent to Paris. As I left the Court of justice my terrible sentence rang in the prison wagon repeated it to me. When I look back at that time, I think I must have been stunned by the unexpected severity of my doom, for I have not the slightest recollection of the particulars of that journey. "Hard labor path. for life!" "Hard labor for life!" I heard book, banded with iron as though it were fettered.

"No. 207," cried the officer, "green." Then I was led into another room, where I put on the uniform of a galley slave. From this moment I lost my individuality. I was no longer Fran-cois Theirry; but No. 207. The officer was present while I was dressing. "Hurry up!" he said; "it's getting late, and you must be married before dinner. "Married?" I repeated. He laughed as he lit a cigar. I was again led through another corridor into damp court, where wild-looking men with clanking chains were walking up and down before the muzzles of can-

"Bring No. 206," cried the officer, "and then call the priest." No. 206 came in, dragging a heavy chain behind him, and with a robust blacksmith. The ring of an iron chain was put round my aukle and forged together with a single stroke of the hammer. A like ring bound me to my companion. Each stroke re-echoed through the arches like the scornful laugh of demons. The officer drew a small red book from his pocket and said: "No. 207, listen to our prisoners' laws: If you attempt flight and fail you will be bastinadoed. If you succeed in getting to the harbor and are there captured, you will be doubly chained for three years. As soon as you are missed three cannon-shots will be fired and signals of alarm will be hoisted on each bastion. Telegraphic messages will be sent to the harbor guards and to the police throughout France." After the officer had read this with a terrible satisfaction, he relit his eigar, put the book away, and left the hall. I was now a prisoner forged to another prisoner. As I looked at him I found his eyes turned toward me. He was a sinister looking fellow, about 40 years old, not any taller than I, but of hercalean build.

"Then you, too, are in for life?" he "How do you know that ?" I exclaimed, angrily.
"I can tell by your cap—green is for

I made no answer.

"This is the fourth time that I've heen here," continued my companion.
"Perhaps you have heard of Gaspare, the counterfeiter!" I had heard of the daring criminal, and drew back tremblingly from his that out of eighty men eight or ten fall gaze. Gaspare and I, with 200 other prisoners, were put to work in a stone quarry on the other side of the harbor. Day after day and week after week, from sunrise to sunset, the rock resounded to our blows. Thus spring and summer pass:

At last there came a day when his hate seemed to diminish. He allowed me night you shall give me satisfaction for

"As you say," he answered, smiling ly, but with a muttered curse. At that moment a flash from the barseveral strokes to free the chain. the storm. About 5 o'clock in the morning, as ringing and saw a large city in front of me. Not daring to go any farther, I sought shelter in some thick shubbery near the road. When night came on I continued my journey; but hunger soon drove me into a small village on the road. I crept softly between the cot tages and knocked on the minister's door. He opened it himself, and I told him my story. He gave me something to eat and to drink, an old coat in ex-change for mine, and a few francs. On the fifth day after my flight from Toulon I reached Italian ground. I begged my way from place to place until I arrived in Rome, where I hoped to find occupation, if not friends. I hired a small room, rested a few days, and then eagerly sought work. Eve ning after evening I returned disappointed The little money which I had followed the stream of passers-by, which led me to St. Péter's. I crept in other prisoners hate such aristocratic wearily and sank down in the shadow of the large doors. Two men stood near me reading a poster that was hanging on one of the columns.

"Merciful heavens!" said one: "how can a man risk his life for a few lire?"

"Horrible work!"

They passed on and were lost in the growd. I sprang up eagerly and read the no-tice. It was headed, "Illumination of St, Peter's," and made known that sketching expedition along the shore, blows. Thus spring and summer passed and autumn came. My fellow-prist oner was a Piedmontese. He had been a thief, counterfeiter, incendiary, and when he last fled from prison he committed a murder. Heaven alone knows to present myself there at 11 o'clock how my sufferings were intensified through this terrible comradeship. How the last terrible comradeship. How the last terrible comradeship.
