This is the season of college commencements, and hundreds of young men are just going out into the world to begin the battle of life. Most of them know that they are capable of tackling any department of business or profession with the certainty of success, but their high opicions of their ability will be dispelled in a few brief years, and they will discover that something more than a diploma is necessary for success. Hand work, perseverance and integrity are the only things that win in the intellectual field.
