Window Gardening

In preparing a window to hold plants, if the room is so arranged that as to protecting manures against rain, it can be well aired by another window wind and the exhausting effects of the or another door, be sure to stop up evto a wadding is an excellent thing to press into the sides of the windows of old houses which have not been made air-tight. Pull it off or cut it in small ure to the weather will prove highly to a window and the certainty true that will not be which was written in blood by a Nihi in proved. The handles are still easier to prepare, there being cheap machines by which they can be rapidly made at a little cost and labor, and, as we may say, at times when there is lit tle else to do. On many farms me! the brooms and most generally the profits of the crop go to them as pocket money. This is a very good way to encourage the boys to work and lay up a little store for the future, when it may come as a helper very opportunely. On man fact where broom corn is raised, a so with a view to selling the brush and the seed, the former going to the reg ar broom makers and the latter feed to fowls, etc., but this is in the way of a regular branch of farm-

In cultivating broom corn, the ground is prepared as for co., and the planting is done immediately after the latter is through with. Broom corn is sown in hills and drills, as may be desired, but mostly in drills, The rows should be about three and a half feet apart; and when in drills the plants stand about a foot apart and in the rows two feet. Three stalks to a hill are sufficient, and, when more, should be reduced to this number, after sprouting a couple of inches The seed should not be covered quite as much as Indian corn. The ground cannot be kept too clear of weeds, and the ground should be well harrowed. The cultivation in all respects is about the same as other When the heads are in full bloom, or a little before, the crop shoul I be harvested, the beginning of which is the breaking over of the brush, which breaking should take brush, which breaking should take place in the stalk about one foot from the brush. The cutting off and gathering the heads should take place when the seed is pretty well ripened. They should be cut off with a sharp knife just above the upper joint. A wagon cart should be at hand to carry away the heads at once, and not allow them to touch the ground. Lay the heads in the vehicle as they are cut off, and all one way, and haul to a dry shed where shelves should be arranged about eighteen inches apart. Some growers place the heads in dry stacks, to remain until the seed is pretty hard, when the seed is separated by an ordi-nary threshing machine. The motion of the machine should be reversed, bunches should be held to the cylinder, turning them back and forth until the seed is all removed. It takes from three to four quarts of seed per acre, which ought to yield from seven to ten hundred pounds of brush and from 80 to 40 pounds of seed.

We broach this subject now in order that where the crop is already on the farm, the seed may be selected in time and the patch of ground selected .- Germantown Telegraph.
