Our Funeral Customs.

BY REV. C. R. CANFIELD.

quently, on very short notice, to go a ing.

From the earliest times the speaking From the earliest times the speaking to the largest congregation that he ever has; for there are many who attend funerals whose shadow never darkens the church door at any other time. It may be that the deceased is and the brute. Sir John Lubbock, was of this same kind. While alive he have a serious considers the rossi. church for any consideration (except at | with man. "It has occurred to me, like taking a mean advantage of a man if adapted to the case of dogs. after he is dead to take him by force Accordingly he has tried experi-where he couldn't be persuaded to go ments with his dog. He printed in while he was alive." And then the legible letters on pieces of stout cardfriends expect more or less of eulogy to be pronounced even though the de-would be a matter of surprise to many. Commonly it is only a day before the funeral. Sometimes the same day. Once a man galloped ahead of the funeral procession to ask me to preach the sermon, and as a means of hastening my preparations he pointed to the procession approaching on the hillside! I met the procession at the churchdoor. This is an extreme case; yet we insist, if a sermon must be preached, that as much time be given to its preparation as to that of the coffin and shroud.

But why have the funeral sermon at all ? It is not the custom in towns and cities except in case of noted persons; but it is customary in this country to have funerals for infants in churches, with full service and the feast follow-ing the burial. "What! not have a blic funeral?" said a man with whom | changed I talked ; "why, you have a chance to preach the gospel to many who never come to church on other occasions." Yes ; but what good does it do them? Did you ever hear of a conversion being made by a funeral sermon ? Did you ever hear of any scoffer being si-lenced, any infidel turned to the truth on such an occasion? But abolishing the funeral sermon does not do away with the services of the minister. One of the tenderest offices of the pastor is But there is no better, more sacred place for this than the home. Especially should the final leave-taking of the friends from their dead never be in pre-sence of a coagregation. The last parting should be too sacred to parade before the eyes of those, often unsym-pathetic and critical, who come from mere curiosity.

Another very objectionable feature of our country funeral customs is the Sunday funeral. Very many people regard the Sabbeth as the most appropriate day to bury their dead. So they harry their preparations if the time is short, and lengthen them if the time is long, so that they may have the funeral on Sunday. I have known those all on Sunday. I have known those who died on Saturday, as well as those patient teacher. who died on Wednesday, to be buried who died on Wednesday, to be buried on Sunday. As a consequence the minister must frequently leave his regular appointment, and several other congregations in the neighborhood are nearly broken up; for everbody, of course, must go to the funeral. Three times within three months it has been taught by circus men and others been taught by circus men and others of depleting the country congregation. Is it not time that this bleeding process should be stopped? It is rarely ever necessary to bury the dead on Sunday, and most clergymen are op-posed to it, yet the custom thrives. Is any thing, except in case of absolute on the Lord's day. Let ministers preach and write against it, and let Christian people set the right example and a bad custom must yield.

But worst of all, is the feast following the funeral in some parts of our country. Especially is this the case in many parts of Pennsylvania. Whatever the origin of the custom, it is bad. The friends who come from a distance must have something to eat, but why cannot the neighbors take them to their homes for entertainment ? Where this custom prevails several of the neighbors must go to the house of the de-ceased and help to prepare the sump-tuous repast. They ought to help in any necessary funeral arrange-ments, but instead of this feast being a necessity it is becoming a nuisance. Friends and neighbors far and near are publicly invited to return to the house for refreshments, and most elaborate preparations are made. I have often been disgusted with the din of cooking utensils and the odor of savory dishes while religious services were being beld in the house. The preparations begun the day previous are completed during the funeral, and when the bereaved return from their new-made grave it is to be ushered into a lively company, and seated at a table loaded with every obtainable luxury. Sometimes the undertaker, with white apron, assisted by several waiters, acts as mas-ter of ceremonies. How the hilarious talking and jesting must grate upon the ears of the mourners! Yet they submit because it is the custom. Few have the courage to break away from the prevailing fashion. Those who can ill afford the expense must be sub ject to it. I have known it to cost a man half a summer's work for the funeral expenses of one of his family, and the feast was an important item in

This leads to the consideration of funeral display. How often has wicked extravagance been shown in some use-less display. Let the preparations be decent and appropriate, but not extravagant. This applies not only to elaborate coffins, but also to mourning gar-ments. Why parade our grief before the public ! Why advertise ourselves as mourners by wearing black? It is well as elsewhere in our funeral customs .- The Presbyterian.

"Your terms for board are satisfac tory," said the elderly man to the land-lady, "but before I accept, allow me to ask you a few questions. Are you a widow?" "Yes." "H'm. I thought as much, and I am a widower. Now, give me a written guarantee that you'll not take advantage of leap year and I'll come." The guarantee was given, but the widow told the cook that see did 't believe it valid, as it was signed quaer compulsion.

Teaching Animals to Converse.

Often the last preparation for the funeral is to "notify" the minister. How short this notice is on the average ing the dog food in a saucer, over which was laid the card on which was the word "food," and beside which was placed an empty sancer covered by a plain card.

"Van," the poodle soon learned to distinguish between the two. Afterward he was taught to bring the card which expressed his wants. "This he now does," says Sir John Lubbock,
"and hands it to me quite prettily, and
I then give him a bone or a little food, brought. He still brings sometimes s plain card, in which case I point out his error, and he then takes it back and changes it." That mistake is not often made by Van. He has learned to dis tinguish between the card with the word and the blank card, no matter how often their relative positions are

This is only the beginning of the very interesting experiments Sir John Lubbock proposes to make. He means to multiply the cards so that the dog may be enabled to communicate freely with him. He also expresses the wish that other owners of dogs which have displayed especial intelligence and docility, would conduct similar experiments, so that the results may be collated and compared. "I confess," he concludes, "I hope that some positive to administer the comforts of religion results might follow, which would to those called to mourn. Indeed, when enable us to obtain a more correct inthe heart is ploughed by sorrow the sight into the minds of animals than seeds of truth often take deepest root. we have yet acquired." we have yet acquired."

All those who are familiar with dogs and who enjoy their frequent compan-ionship, will both acknowledge that Sir John Lubbock has reason for his hope, and trust with him that the results secured will enable him to explore hitherto secret chambers of the canine

The Times will enter upon the new year stronger and more prosperous than ever before in its history—more widely read and quoted, more heartly commended, and more hereely criticised, with a more complete organization, and an abier staff of contributors—and with the same independence and fearlessness that has made it successful and powerful in the past.

The Times has no party to follow, no candidates to advance, but will meet every lisue, as it has ever done, with consistent devotion to the right, to honest government, and the public weifare, And, walle maintaining its position as the leading jo-rnal of Philadelphia, it will aim to be continually in the advance in all that can add value to a rewspaper. ally in the advance in all that can add value to a rewspaper.

The value of a newspaper is not in its size or display, but in the intelligence and care, the conciscness and freshness with which it is edited. The Times spends lavishly for news from all ports of the world, but all its dispatches are carefully edited and condensed, in order to give the complete news of the day in the most concise and attractive shape, and with it a large variety of entertaining and instructive reading. The best writers at home and abroad are employed to enterth its columns, and to make it a journal adapted both to the busy man and to the leisure of the home circle, a welcome visitor to intelligent and honest citizens of every political, religious, and social taste.

home and abroad are employed to nrich its columns, and to make it a journal adapted both to the busy man and to the leisure of the home circle, a welcome visitor to intelligent and honest eftizens of every political, religious, and social taste.

The Weekly Times is altogether different from the weekly newspapers of twenty years ago. The day of those papers is gone by. The telegraph and better local newspapers everywhere, especially in the thriving centres of rural population, have made the old weekly metropolitan newspaper unsatistying. Those that cling to their ancient usages have lest their hold on our forward-moving people; they are but shadows of their former greatness, and they have but a shadow of their former power. Those papers have had their usertainess, but it is gone; and, with it, they are going too. It was not the fault of the papers; it was the improvement of the country that brought about the change. Men and women, wherever they live, now require fresher news; and they require more than news.
