SELECT STORY.

MR. BROWN'S HEIRESS.

BY R. M.

"If you mean to go in for art, old fellow, you must make up your mind to travel by a veritable Via Dolorosa before you attain success, especially if you have to live by it," said my friend Ted O'Leary. I have been through the whole business, and know all about it.

I have since proved his words to be true, although I have less cause to complain than many of my comrades of the brush for a lucky accident, provided my wife and myself with the means of living till I got a fair start.

I had passed through some grievous experiences before that had happened.

When I had begun to make a little progress, and had saved enough money to enable me to do so, I determined to give myself several weeks' stay in the country, where I hoped to recruit my health, at the same time that I pursued my studies.

I meant to live as cheaply as possible, and had not all the time; yet it was with a host of pleasant anticipations that I jumped into a third class carriage at Liverpool street, and, after a three hours' journey arrived at a quiet little country station for W.

The moment I saw Reginald Vane I conceived an intense aversion to him, and he took no pains to hide the fact that the feeling was mutual.

The first evening I spent in his society he treated me with a supercilious affectation of superiority which made me feel as if I were a worm.

"Oh, porter! Where are they all?" exclaimed an irritable voice, belonging to a stout elderly gentleman, who was struggling with swollen gouty fingers, to turn the stiff handle of the door.

"With some difficulty I managed to open it for him, just as the station master had given the signal for the train to move on.

The porter, catching sight of me opening the door as the train was moving, shouted to me to "Stand back!" and ran to enforce his command; but the irate passenger forced open the door, which the official had nearly reshat, and jumped out, falling as he did so with one foot between the legs of the porter.

Catching him as he fell, while the porter at the same moment signalled for the train to stop, I was fortunate enough to extricate the old gentleman from his perilous position.

"Is Mr. Brown?" I hope you're not hurt, he exclaimed the station master, coming up.

"Hurt!" he replied, stuttering with rage. "I'll report every man jack of you. If it had not been for this gentleman—"

"Correct! The reason—I—I—"
