SELECT STORY. THE TALE OF AN UMBRELLA.

"Can that be Annie Shepherd?" The speaker half rose to his feet and looked eagerly out of the window.

"She has less common sense than any woman I ever knew," he said with impatience.

"The day was quite unfit for action, though eminently favorable for reverie and reflection."

"I should call her—I should name her, Hannah!—the 'Caucasian!'"

"It was inquisitorial as to rhyme or measure, but utilitarian as to quality, as befitted a commercial man."

"How does it happen that for merely one asking I am in possession of this article?"

"I did not want to carry it—it was merely a stress of politeness that impelled you to ask to do so."

"I hate an umbrella," he answered with vehemence.

"I got over very well without either," he answered with a smile.

"I did not start till the rain was over, an accent of self-righteous complaisance on the personal pronoun."

"I was out just in time for the final dash, and she delivered over to him her water-soaked burden."

"I did not seem at all to him as if I had not been waiting for him in being there."

"Would you have been as generous to me," he said, bending down to her.

"I never quarrel. It is you who distract me always, and because I am not doctile you—"

"Yes, I love you, Annie." There was no escape, no room whatever for coquetry.

"I do not think of it as if I were a man, but as if I were a woman."

"I do not think of it as if I were a man, but as if I were a woman."

"I do not think of it as if I were a man, but as if I were a woman."

"I do not think of it as if I were a man, but as if I were a woman."

CONVENTION OF STENOGRAPHERS. A WELCOME EXTENDED THEM BY GOV. PATTERSON.

Stenographic writers, both male and female, from all parts of the world, gathered Thursday morning in the hall of the house of representatives.

Blaine's Railroad Passes. The following article, which we take from the Philadelphia Record, exhibits James G. Blaine as a dishonest, despicable man.

Longfellow in Westminster. From over the wild Atlantic, And wash of the Western seas, A voice came that the summer's end Of summer among the trees.

Women and Wine. I notice that women drink a great deal more wine, and drink it more publicly, than they used to.

The Clean Newspaper. There is a growing feeling, in healthy communities, against journals which make it their special business to pervert a taste by seeking out and serving up in a seductive form disgusting and licentious revelations.

Voices From the Depths. A story is told of the Pennsylvania oil region to the effect that some who were employed to remove the tubing and casing from an abandoned oil well solemnly declared that they heard a spirit-like voice which cursed the men who were robbing the bowels of the earth of healing materials.

A Stand Off. With a couple of practical jozlers, living at a big up town hotel, bought a terrapin while walking through the market the other day, and slipped it into the bed of a fresh arrival who had just registered.

The Arctiocyte. This vegetable is more highly esteemed in England than in this country. It is a small, round, thick scale of the flower heads, which are eaten both raw and boiled.

Weeds are great absorbers of moisture from the land, and if tolerated, often rob the crops injuriously in dry weather.

The oldest inhabitant is usually a man. Says an exchange. But it usually is so if women would only stand up to their eyes.

There is a paper published in Gordon, Ohio, which is named the Cross Eyes, and it is suggested that it ought to support Ben Butler.
