Care of Live Stock.

If the farmer would have his livestock come out in the spring in a thrifty condition he must not neglect the "little things" relating to their care as well as the more essential matters. Among other things the stock large and small should have easy and convenient access to a supply of good water. It will not do to turn them out of their stables during the day to wonder about at will to and a watering place unless some provision of that kind has almiseries ?" ready been made for them. They should have pure water, if possible, and a supply of it sufficient for the needs of all. The water obtained from avail stagnant pools in the barnyard or other chance places is not fit for any kind of stock.

Discrimination is required in the matter of allowing sheep and cattle ou -door freedom during cold weather. The length of time they should be permitted to run at large each day must be determined by the present condition of the weather, the location of the stable and yards and in a considerable degree by the condition of the stock itself. Whe.e the barnyard faces the sonth, or sunny days the stock are better out of doors as much as possible. In cold, stormy days they need the rheam best shelter obtainable. Some breeds feet."

of cattle and sheen are constituted to on dure cold and exposure better than per a ent ?" others, and the same is true of individual members of the herd or flock. This is a matter to be determined by observation and experience. Most breeds of sheep will, of course, endure cold better and need more out-door freedom than cattle. The stables and enclosures should be kept clean and dry. It is too much to expect that stock will keep in good heart and thrifty growth where they are compelled to spend nights and days together in the midst of the filth of a stable. It is unnatural and therefore wrong. Cleanly and wholesome surroundings are quite as needful to the health and comfort of animals as human beings. It is often the case that cattle have too much bedding as too little. If the stable itself is warm and the floor kept dry and clean the stock will do better than if they stand up to their sides in a mass of dirty bedding. The bedding that is used should be changed frequently. Keep the stable vel train against the company to rewindows closed against cold drafts, him in a collision with a freight train, and by all means have the ceiling over due to the carelessness of the conducvent the dust and chaff from sifting down on the animals beneath.
