A "Madman's" Legacy.

"Sire!" exclaimed a man in the homely garb of a mechanic to Richelien, Prime minister of France, as he was entering his palace: "Sire, I have made a discovery which shall make rich and great the nation which shall develop it. Sire, will you give "me an audience?"

Richelieu, constantly importuned, finaly ordered the "madman" imprisoned. Even in jail he did not desist from declaring his "delusion," which one day attracted the attention of a British nobleman, who heard De Cause's story and developed his discovery of steam

All great discoveries are at first derided.

Seven years ago a man vet under middle age, enriched by a tusiness which covered the continent, found himself suddenly stricken down. When his physicians said recovery was impossible, he used a new discovery, which, like all advances in science, had been opposed bitterly by the school-men. Nevertheless, it cured him, and out of gratitude therefor he consecrated a part of his wealth to the spreading of its merits before the world. Such in brief is the history of Warner's safe cure, which has won, according to the testimony of eminent persons, the most deserved reputation ever accorded to any known compound, and which is finally winning on its merits alone the approval of the most conservative practitioners. Its fame now belts the globe. - The Herald.

A gentleman living at Auburn, Ill., until quite recently was the very un-happy owner of a cat whose happiness was never complete save when stealing something to eat from off the dinner table. He tried coaxing and then beating, but all to no purpose. Finally in an evil moment the idea came to him that perhaps a little sudden surprise would tend to make the feline mend her ways; and the more he thought of it the more he became convinced that that was what she needed. At last, after carrying out several schemes in his mind, he decided to put some dynamite into a saucer of milk, which he did leaving, it on the dinner table. He then stepped out on the porch where he could see the fun from a distance, and waited. He had not long to wait, for no sooner had pussy been left to herself than she sprang up on the table and began to get on the outside of the milk. Softly the man laughed to himself, but his joy was of short dur-ation, for suddenly something burst and he knew no more. When he regained his senses a few hours later he found himself about a quarter of a mile from home in a cornfield, with only a rock on to cover his nakedness. He tried to remember what had happened, but couldn't until he arrived at the gate where his home once stood. All that was left to tell the tale was a large hole in the ground, and a piece of cat skin sticking to a tree near by .- Peck's

"Johnny, here, get out of that bed! What do you mean by sleeping until this time of the morning," said his mother as she grabbed the bed-covering, "Quit that! Doggone it, didn't you say many a time you wanted me to be a great man?"

Yes, but you'll never be a great man by sleeping so much." "I won't, hey? Wasn't pap readin' st las night about Dan Webster jist las' night about Dan sleepin' nine hours every night? I think you might let me sleep enough to be as great as he was, anyhow,

How it Feels to be Killed in Battle.

At the battle of Shilon I was shot between the eyes. I was left on the field for dead, published as killed, and

At the battle of Shiloh I was shot between the eyes. I was left on the field for dead, published as killed, and had the rare pleasure of reading my obituary in the local newspaper several months afterward. It was a fine piece of writing, full of pathos, and affected me strangely. Testimony of that kind ought to convince any fair minded court that I really died for my country, and ought to know something about how it feels to go hence in a glorious cause. I will therefore try to tell you how it looked to one who has been to the margin of the dark river, though it seems I didn't quite cross over after all.

When the shock struck me it seem as if I was struck with a crowbar coming endwise at great speed. A thought of that kind passed through my mind at that time. I felt the missile tear through my head as plainly as I ever felt anything, though it did not do so, and I felt the air rush through after it and chill my brain. I was conscious what seemed to be two or three minutes, from the amount of thinking I did, but it might not have been more than as many seconds, for I have since learned that the minutes work with inconceivable rapidity.

The first feeling that came over me

The first feeling that came over me was one of most terrible disappointment. It was absolutely crushing. It was not a feeling of regret that I was cut down at the dawn of manhood-I never thought of that-but it was a feeling of cruel disappointment that I had not been spared to get to the battery upon which we were charging at the time I was hit. A moment before, my blood had been seething with that indescribable frenzy of excitement which can only be experienced when the veins are bursting with a thrill that goes through them when a charge into the very jaws of death is being made. I was too much maddened by the intoxication of battle to think of personal danger. Not a thought of that kind crossed my mind. In the earlier stages of the carnage the sight of a dead man had sickened me, and I had felt my cheek blanching and my knees trembling when the blood of a comrade reddened the earth, but not now. All feeling of timidity had been swept away by the magnetism of that sublime m when victory was in sight. I felt tigerish, and thirsted for vengeance. I wanted to get to that battery, and I wanted to get there bad, I was strain ng every nerve to that end, and to be ent down at the moment when victory was almost within grasp, with shouts of defiant triumph bursting from my powder stained lips, I tell you, friends it was simply awful. Nothing in laguage can paint the wretched feeling of disappointment that overwhelmed me at that cruel moment. Had I been spared to reach the guns, 1 believe I could have died without a regret, but to be snuffed out before the job was finished was a calanity too great to find expression in words.

Immediately after being hit I felt myself sinking into a dazed condition, and then came a season of debate with dead. I had a hole straight through my head big enough to admit a good sized cane, I thought; therefore I must be dead. A man in my fix would have been killed instantly, hence I was was concerned. I could not be alive.

The remaining of the complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, this litters has no equal.

Cleanse the Vitlated Blood when its imband the skin in Eruptions or But some other faculty of mind would most certainly dead so far as the body combat this argument and try to conince me that I was still alive. "I can move my hand or my foot," I would reason, "and a corpse couldn't do that: so I'm alive after all." "But I don't move my band or my foot," the other faculty would insinuate. "I simply think I do; so I must be dead. My brains are scattered over the ground. There's no doubt about that, for I felt them go, and that means instant death; so of course I'm actually dead. And so it went until I lost all consciousness; one part of the brain trying to convince me that I was dead, and another trying as persistently to pesuade me that I was alive, all in a dreamy, semi-conscious sort of way, gradually growing fainter and fainter, somewhat like the sensation of going

There was no feeling of pain; no thought of death, except as a stubborn fact that could not be avoided. Not thought of my past life : no thought of friends or home. Not the slightest regret of my untimely taking off, aside from the temporary feeling of disapointment above referred to. Not a single pang that all my hopes and am-bitions had come to a standstill. My future status was not once considered. There was no hope of heaven, no fear of hell. I heard no celestial music. I was not uplifted by angel hands and borne gently away. No scraphic beings robed in light flitted before me with rustling wings. No dark forms glowered upon me and barred the way to the realms of joy. I was simply drifting away from consciousnes in a manner not at all uncomfortable; my last recollection being the mental debate as to whether I was alive or dead. Who can tell but that death on the battle field may not have been in many cases an exact repetition of my own feelings at the time when I believed my last moment had come ? Had I really died before recovering consci-ousness such would indeed have been my end.

I remained in a senseless condition four days, and when I came to the noise of battle was still ringing in my ears. The debate was resumed, but instantly dropped by the introduction of convincing testimony that I was still among the living. My head was greatly swollen, and seemed bursting with pain. I was entirely blind, my eyes being completely closed by the swollen condition of my head and the matter from the wound, which had caked over them. The blood had matted all over my face in a thick crust. I was in the hospital, and somebody was at work trying to bring my features once more into daylight, and he was doing it in a manner that was torture. This had probably brought me back to consciousness.—Lige Brown in Chicago Ledger.

The First Reader.

A wan school-teacher entered the book-store near Greenville, Miss,a few days since, dragging after her a small fat boy, who held in one little paw a mutilated "first reader," and with the other wiped his weeping eyes and pug

"Have you any first readers except hese ?" asked the school-teacher. "Any except these t" repeated the book-man. "Why, ma'am, these are the nice little books I sold you the other day; surely you haven't any ob-jection to them ?" The have pictures in them and the boys can't learn anything from them, said the tearful teacher. "Not learn because of the picturesmpossible! Why ma'am, the pictures are put there for the purpose of help-ing the scholars to learn. Allow me to give you a lesson in the art." Ther turning to the boy: "Come, sit in this chair my man, and let me see if you are not a wise fellow. Take your book and begin here on this page;

now look good at the picture, then spell the word." The boy having cleared away suffiec. sat upon a chair with the stumped tord boots two feet from the floor, and taking the book, began.

"D-o g, dog."
"Ah," said the bookseller : "you see ma'am. Now, my man," he added, sit-ting down and closing his eyes compla ently, "now, my man, proceed."
"Rat, mouse. P.i-g, hog, pro seeded the boy.

"No, no, not so fast," cried the book seller, startled. "Why," you see this fellow eating cheese is too large to be a mouse, so we call him a rat; and this animal cating potato-parings is too small to be a hog, so we call him a pig: understand? Well, go on, then, and lock attentively at the pictures."
"P-a-i-l, bucket. I-n-k, inkstand," spelled the boy,gazing at the pictures.
"No, no," cried the bookseller, and began to explain. The explanation lasted some twenty minutes, after which the bookseller said again: · Understand, now ! Well, then, go on again and be sure to look close at the pictures, so you will know what

The boy began again with his nos almost touching the page.

The orange tree usually cultivated for the perfume of its flowers is the Bigavardier the fruit of which is bitter and non-edible. It is a species unknown in America. But of all kinds of non-producing oranges the Bergamot is really the best. Its essence is the softest, the most exquisite. The color of the essence is a clear green, with yellow as it gets older. It is the heaviest of all the perfumes of the orange flower, and the most evanescent, unless care is taken to change the flask or other vessel from time to time, when it is found to preserve its odor the longest. It dissolves in alcohol at 28 degrees. The essence is extracted in Sicily or at Reggio, opposite Messina, ployed in medicine to strengthen the body or correct the odor of offensive ingredients. It enters into various odorous compounds and pomades, and toilet waters are made of it. The bark is taken a little before maturity.
