Making a New Arm for a Man.

A surgical operation of exceeding interest is being performed at the Hahne man Hospital, says the N. Y. Tribune. It is one of those cases that cannot be finished at a single sitting, but which must be carried through various stages in a progressive way from the begin ning to the end. It was begun about three weeks ago, and from the present indications there is little doubt that the result desired will be attained.

German, 31 years old. He received his injury accidentally. He was extremely fond of smoking a pipe. One evening about nine months are evening about nine months ago be was enjoying a quiet smoke in his room, and while reading fell asleep. In some way the pipe, which he still held in his mouth, was overturned, and the hot ashes fell from the bowl upon his shirt sleeve and set it on fire. It smothered a time and burned several small holes in the sleeve, and then it burst into a flame and the sleeper was aroused. The fire had reached his flesh, and he tore at the burning cloth madly. He rolled over on the floor, and finally the flame was extinguished. His right arm from the wrist to the shoulder was terribly burned, and it looked as if the desh could be scraped from the bone without trouble. The pain was intense, and from the nature of the wound it appeared as if the arm would have to be amputated close up to the shoulder. Private medical treatment was tried for a time, but as it did not accomplish any material benefit Doll went to a hospital. He remained under constant care for two months. By this time the forearm had healed, leaving a frightful scar, with the cicatrical tissue drawing in every direction. Despite the most persevering treatment the upper portion of the arm from the elbow to the shoulder could not be healed. The patient went to several hospitals, but could get no relief. There was such a large surface of exposed flesh in the wound that the pus formation was unusually large, and the antiseptic pre-cautions which were taken did not pre-vent the absorption of the poisonous matters into the patient's system. Thus a dangerous condition of blood poisoning was set up. He grew pale and emaciated, lost his strength and courage, and when he was admitted to the Hahnemann Hospital, about two months ago, he was a living skeleton with hardly muscular power enough left to raise his hand. As soon as he was admitted measares were taken to stamp out the blood contamination, which were eventually successful, and patient began to recover strength. When he got strong enough and his body was sufficiently free from the incidental disease, it was determined by the attending surgeon to make a new upper arm from the flesh of the patient's body, and to heal up the wound by covering it over with healthy tissue. At first small pieces of flesh were taken from various parts of his body and placed in different spots upon the raw shoulder as a mat-ter of experiment, to determine whether the flesh could be successfully grafted. The experiment was successful. The little pieces of flesh and skin united and made little cases on the diseased shoulder. These minor operation were performed several days apart and without the use of any other than a local ansesthetic. Fverything had gone on so well that about ten days ago it was determined to begin the ant part of the op which consited in covering up a large portion of the arm at one time with The patient was first put under the influence of an anæsthetic. Then all the cicatrical tissue upon the upper arm was scraped with a knife until it bled profusely and was entirely raw. While the arm was held away from the body two incisions were made about three inches apart running upward from all the ribs for shout seven inches. At the lower end of these incisions a crossent was made, and then the strip of flesh was dissected up from the ribs, the full length of the incision, making a large flap. This was left united at the upper end. Then the patient's arm was brought close to his side and this loose flap was laid over on the raw flesh on the arm and carefully pressed and fitted into position. When this had been done there was still a large section of the upper back arm remaining uncovered. Two incisions were again made similar to the first two, running up and down the apper portion of the side of the back. The flesh was thick at this point, and permitted a free dissection. While the upturned flesh was yet palpitating with the beart influence, it was put over the bleeding surface of the arm and fitted into place. Then the two flaps were securely fastened into position by long bands of sticking plaster, while larger bands were run over the lower portion of the arm and around the abdomen and back, and interlaced so that all motion of the arm was stopped. After the whole wound had been covered with an antiseptic dressing. the ether cone was taken off the pa tient's face, and he soon recovered consciousness. He suffered little from shock, and the hemorrhage was comparatively slight.

The arm was kept securely fastened to his side for a week, and the wound was carefully dressed every day. At first it was not thought that the flesh from the side would adhere to the flesh on the arm, but after two days it took a firm hold and grew as if it belonged there, and little shoots of new flesh branched out in every direction. A few days ago the ends uniting the two flaps to the body were severed, the loose portions were drawn around the under side of the arm, the edges trimmed so as to make a perfect fit, and were then united with satures. In continuing the operation it will be necessary to alter the shape of the flaps in some places. Only a little sloughing has taken place, and this has had injurious effect. The arm now presents a comparatively natural ap-pearance. The biceps muscle will be somewhat restricted until it gets used to the new covering, and then it will move as freely as ever. The patient is physically strong, and since the pain has subsided in his arm, has improved perceptibly, and the prospects are that he will be able to lave the hospital in about a week with a new arm.

ocents Abroad' and "The Gilded Age," nearly or quite $500,000, and he has recently drawn $63,000 on the proceeds of four months sale of "Huckleberry Finn." If we add to these figures the dividends obtained from "Roughing It," 'Tom Sawyer," nagazine articles, and his ablest work. the patent scrap-book, Mr. Clemens has probably made more money by his pen than any other writer except Sir Walter Scott-if, indeed, his earnings do not aggregate as much as Scott's. If, then, an author's cash ac count is the true measure of his literary ability, the St. Louis Republican urges Mr. Clemens has had but one rival in all the ages. He is a veritable whate among the insignificant minnows which people the sea of literature. The poorest of his magazine articles brought him at least double the sum Milton received from "Paradise Lost: four months' receipts from "Huckel-berry Finn" are more than Shake-speare was paid for all his dramas; "Innocents Abroad" has been more profitable in a financial way than were he collective poems of Wadsworth. Southey, Shelley and Coleridge, and the patent scrap book has been a richer mine than that of Addison and Swift. As for such impecunious scribblers as Spenser, Burns and Poe the sum total of their pecuniary re wards did not amount to as much as half the proceeds of the dramatic version of "The Gilded Age." Poor Burns was dunned on his death bed for a debt of $35. A revised edition of Mr. Clemens' "Jumping Frog" would bring the creator of that famous animal ten times as much as the miserable sum which vexed the last hours of the sweetest of song writers.
