On Decoration Day while Main street vas crowded with people, two young men from the country came dashing down the street on horseback, evidently thinking it was a good time to "show off." In their efforts to be smart one of them ran over little Boyd Cadman who was riding down the street in front of the postoffice on his picycle. As the horses were almost upon im he turned himself from his wheel, therwise he would have been ridden down and seriously injured, if not killed. There was intense indignation against the reckless riders by all who saw them, and they may be thankful that they were not arrested for violating an ordinance which forbids fast riding or lriving on the streets.

WALTMAN'S LETTER.

INTERVIEW WITH SOME OF THE PERSONS COMPLAINED OF

A letter dated at the county prison, May 24, and signed by Isaac Waltman, was published in the Republican and Sentinel last week, in which the writer charges that since his commitment to jail on the 9th of March, the prison doors were closed noninst all his friends, no one was allowed to converse with him except through the bars of the outside prison door, and then only in the presence of an official. He says he was not allowed to hand written statements to his friends concerning his defense, and all avenues of preparing a defense were aristrarily closed. Letters written by him were opened by the prison officials and the contents made known to the prosecution, and he accuses the officials of acting as spies for the prosecution The substance of the letter is that he be lieves he would not have been convicted if he had not thus have been prevented from preparing his defense. The attention of Sheriff Smith was called to this letter, and he was asked whether the allegations were true. give his answer in his own words.

see no one alone. His counsel saw him whenever they came, and had private con sultations with him every time they asked it. The first day Waltman was in fail be gave my son, a boy 14 years old, a bottle with an order for hydrate of chloral, and asked him to go to the drug store and get the bottle filled, at the same time caution ing him particularly not to let any one else at the jail see the bottle, but bring it direct to him (Waltman). The boy had recently had the measles and couldn't go out. so he gave it to the keeper, Wm. Barrett, who took it to Moyer's drug store, where he was told it was poison. This fact was ommunicated to the Judge and the District Attorney, and we were cautioned to keep a close watch on him, as it was a suspicious circumstance. I knew afterwards he tried to get the same drug through other parties, and those were the rersons who were not allowed to see him alone. I do not know what Waltman wanted to de with chloral, but I considered it my duty to watch him, after his effort to obtain the oisonous drug in a secret way. It is true that some of Waltman's letters were opened. It is the practice at the fail to read all letters to and from prisoners, as I understand it is done in nearly all prisons. This is done to prevent prisoners from planning escapes with their friends outside. We had had some information through a letter written by another prison er that there was a scheme on foot to break jail, though there was nothing in particular to connect Waltman with it. Nothing contained in any of his letters was ever made known to the prosecution by me, and all he says in the letter published last week about the fail officials acting as spies is

W. W. Barrett, keeper at the jail, wa interrogated on the subject and said: "The Sheriff's daughter heard Waltman tell the boy not to let any one see the bottle, particularly myself. The bottle was given to me and inside of it was a paper on which was written "Chloral Hydrate, 10 cents worth. Please give full amount." The bottle is a wide-mouthed one, and looks ecounts and financial statements of school like a pill bottle. I took it to Moyer Bros. oards," and says that it must not be dis- drug store, and L. N. The next day I took the ottle to the Judge and he said that notl ing of that sort should be permitted to be including the assets and liabilities of the passed in, and that we should keep a close watch so that no one should supply him and vouchers relating to the same, to be with it secretly. For that reason we were by said auditors examined, and if found to very careful about who saw him alone. I e correct, approved; such statements to saw most of the letters written by Waltbe spread upon the minutes of the board man, but nothing contained in them was of directors, and in a condensed but fully ever told the prosecution. I never had classified form published by said board in not any conversation about Waltman with the prosecuting attornies, except to inform the the most public places in the district, or, if District Attorney of his effort to get chlo-

District Attorney Billimeyer was asked whether he received any information from the Sheriff or any of his officials concerning Waltman's defense, and he replied emphatically, "No, I had no conversation with any prison official about Waltman, concerning any matter that was made us of in the trial. There were 18 witnesses examined for the defense, most of whom live in upper Columbia and lower Luzerne counties and this fact of itself refutes the allegation that all avenues of preparing a defense were arbitrarily closed."

Col. Freeze also stated that any allegation as to the prosecution receiving information of Waltman's defense from the Sheriff or anybody else, were false as far as he is concerned.

In the fullness of time, a republic ros up in the wilderness of America. Thou sands of years had passed away before this child of the ages could be born. From whatever there was of good in the systems f former centuries she drew her nourish nent. She washed the gold of political wisdom from the sands, wherever it was found.

Republics had heretofore been limited to small cantons or cities. America, doing that the like of which had not before beer known upon the earth, or believed by kings and statesmen to be possible, extended her republic across a continent.

But wise as our forefathers were in man espects, they allowed one deadly serpen to fasten itself on the nation's vitals.

Nature works in sincerity, and is eve rue to its law. The bee hives honey. The viper distils polson. In like manner just idea gives life and progress and glory: a false conception portends disaster, snamand death. Conforming his conduct to these convic-

In little more than a month the volcan burst. The old flag on Sumpter was fired on, and the echoes of those cannon, rever berated from ocean to ocean, and from the Lakes to the Gulf. At this day, twentyfive years distant from that memorable time, we fail to realize what an upturning and outpouring there was. As the yeomanry in 1775 flocked to Lex ngton and Boston, at the sound of British guns, to establish freedom throughout the olonies, so those guns on Sumpter called forth the men of the North, from their Kline, aged 79 years, 5 months and 13 quiet homes to save the Union from dismemberment. The halls of theological eminaries and colleges sent forth their oung men and striplings from the class oom to the camp. The lumbermen from the forest-the mechanics from their benches.-farmers and farmer's sons left the ground but half plowed, the grain but half sown, and shouldering their muskets learned to face death without fear. To us, especially of the present generaion it is as a tale that is told. It comes down to us as an historical fact that two nillions of men went into the field.

That, in six hundred and twenty-five sattles and skirmishes, blood flowed like water-it streamed over the grassy plaint stained the rocks-the undergrowth of the forest was red with it.

By the utmost stretch of our imagina tion, we cannot bring ourselves fully to realize the awful truth contained in these statements.

You who have shouldered your muskets and formed a part of this moving mass of humanity; who have stood in the thickest of the fight, the deafening din of battle clanging in your ears, grape and cannister poured forth from screeching throats, scattering havoc and death on all sides; to you hese things are not mere idle tales, but corrible truths.

You know how awful was the carnage on that bloodiest day America ever saw, of humanity surged to and fro in their desperate efforts to hold the field, and after it had been thrice won and lost-how Smith with his Maine and Vermont regiments swept like an avalanche through the field, fell upon the wood, cleared them in ten minutes and the field with its ghastly haryest finally remained with us.

And again that splendid feat of Burnside holding the hill. At four o'clock receiving orders from McClellan to carry the batteries on the summit of the hill immediately in the low prices at which they offer them. als front, Burnside, with his artillery in the advance, in the face of a most; destructive fire, charges straight up the hill. The batteries on the summit are silenced.

the hill in long dark lines and broad dark masses. A blue flash of smoke bursts now and then among them,—a horse or a man, or a half dozen go down, and then the whirlwind sweeps on. The hill is carried but can it be held! The rebel guns from an adjoining and higher hill pour down an angry tempest of shell among Burnside's guns and men. A rebel battle line is formed on the cres of this same hill and moves down its side on a bayonet charge, in regular order though met by incessant discharges of musketry, it charges straight for the Union troops. But before plunging into those hostile masses there is a balt-the left wavers, breaks and flees. A confederate reinforcement comes up, and then those two contending masses surge to and fro on that hill side, in angry turmoil. The In so far we have done well. But as we glass of Mc Clellan, the commander-in-chief is riveted to the spot. He sees Burnside ogs which cannot be suppressed, we'l up is pressed. His face grows dark with anxious thought. In response to an appea for aid from Burnside, be turns to the messenger and slowly says : "Tell Gener al Burnside that this is the battle of the of pleasure, half of pain. Everywhere and war. He must hold his ground till dark, at any cost. I will send him Miller's bat tery. I can do nothing more. I have no infantry." The sun had already gone down. But half an hour of daylight remained, and in that half hour, the vindictive cannonade of the rebols died away, and tne Union forces slept that night on a field won by their valor and covered with the dead and wounded of the enemy.

The first decisive blow had been given to the army of the rebellion in its attempts to invade the north. This battle has therefore been called the "forerunner of Gettys burg."

It was here that "panic and desperation seized upon the leaders of the rebellion which resulted in overwhelming defeat on Pennsylvania soil." And it may be interesting to us to-day to know that two of the most decisive blows struck at rebellion, were delivered by two Pennsylvanians, George B. McClellan at Antietam and Winfield Scott Hancock at Gettysburg, serving under that other and greater Pennsylvanian, Geo. G. Meade. But however gratifying it may be know these facts, it is none the less sad to contemplate that, to-day, for the first time, the graves of these two distinguished
