THE COLUMBIAN, VOL. XX, NO. 31. COLUMBIA DEMOCRAT, VOL. I, NO. 31.

Supposed most valuable stones were false! Every diamond was pasted, indeed speaking generally, the only genuine part of the booty was the gold setting.

"Excuse me, gov'nor," exclaimed Mr. Millicent, after staring open-mouthed at his companion for a considerable number of seconds.

"No, I'm — if I do," returned Mr. Millicent, fervor. "I'm going to file my petition," said Mr. Facet.

"What's that?" inquired Mr. Millicent. "Bankruptcy," exclaimed Mr. Facet, shortly.

"It's lucky for you that I am, for this job will put a good many hundred pounds in your pocket."

"I'll stand in, gov'nor, make no mistake," said Mr. Millicent, with glistening eyes.

"Right you are!" said Mr. Millicent, rather abashed. "In the case of jewelry, I suppose that no time is lost in taking out the stones and melting the metal."

"Very well. Now fill your glass and listen to me," said Mr. Facet, drawing his chair closer.

"The conversation at this juncture became too technical to be of any interest, relating as it did to the topography of Mr. Facet's premises, the means of escaping into the street, and the habits of the persons left in charge."

"How'd it do that look as if you was born'd in the profession, gov'nor?" he ejaculated, with perfect sincerity.

"If you get a blank postcard on the morning of the day," said Mr. Facet, rising from his seat and buttoning up his coat.

"All right, sir. And look here," added Mr. Millicent, enthusiastically, "if the police find the slightest clue to lead them to suspect it is a put up thing, I'll give myself up and do another stretch. I can't stand that."

"Mr. Facet took his departure, leaving the old school-fellow in capital spirits, which were fully sustained during the interval which elapsed before the date fixed for the enterprise arrived."

"That was ever so long ago," said Mr. Facet, a little uneasily. "You have not been in the city for some time," said Mr. Facet, sharply.

"Something in his patron's tone caused Mr. Millicent to check the cautioning reply which rose to his lips, and he responded silently, "It's bad times for honest men."

"It depends what kind it is. I want money," answered Mr. Millicent. "A job in your own line of business," continued Mr. Facet.

"Mr. Millicent could hardly believe his ears and he stared at his old school-fellow in amazement. "Are you going to put me up to something?" he inquired, recovering his assurance.

"Yes, if you will promise me, by everything you hold sacred, never to breathe a word of this conversation," said Mr. Facet, impressively. "All right, gov'nor, I'm straight," "You'll swear it?" "By the holy poker—yes!"
