SELECT STORY.

MILLY'S COMFORTER.

A COMMONPLACE STORY.

It was woven of fleecy, crinkly stuff, with a soft, warm lining.

Weeks slipped by, while Jimmy continued to tell papers, with varying but ever increasing success.

There, there, boy, keep up a good heart; it won't be long, you know.

So, unknown to Tom, the long, red line of comfort went with him, to help the battle against cold and storm.

Another great vessel, very different from the clumsy common Tom sailed in, lay by the pier.

It was a fine, sleek vessel, with a hull of polished mahogany.

ADDITIONAL LOCAL.

Speaking of corner loafers the first week of court Judge Elwell said to the grand jury.

"We understand that in certain parts of the country persons habitually congregate in front of the premises."

"The people have a right to pass over the highway, but not to stand and loaf upon it, collecting in numbers."

"It is in some of the published remarks of this court that if keepers of saloons and hotels allow persons to assemble about their buildings at improper times and especially on Sunday, we would consider the fact as prima facie evidence of a violation of some provision of the liquor laws."
