PHILADELPHIA, December 1, 1888

December. Holiday month. Christmas The vision broadens until the great day comes, then narrows to the quiet New-Year-day, living at length in the worry and work of the New Year only as a pleasant memory of a past joy. Christmas joys are born of cares. Parent, child, brother, sister, friend, dependent are cares, each and all, until the Christmas tokens are provided. Take these cares easily. Buy early. Soon you will be jostled on the sidewalk, crowded in the store; shortly the overworked days will come. We can do better for you now than then.

A show of mechanical toys in the corner. Bears dance, monkeys chatter, railroad trains drawn by real engines puffing out real steam are in active motion. Rocking-horses that will not hrow the riders nor tear carpets; make-believe corks of champagne bottles, each holding ten little corks, for miniature ten-pins; good - humored games; little school-desks with blackboards in the lid-and, and, and, writer's paralysis threatens him that would attempt to crowd into this hurried column anything like a full account of our toys.

Easy to make a catalogue of which is erroneous. Most people think what we haven't got.

Homicide.

CRARGE TO THE GRAND JURY.

We understand that there will be a case of homicide presented to you. In regard to that, there is no occasion to give you special instructions, further than to inform ou in a general way of the outline of the law upon that subject. The term homicide means the killing of a human being that may not be murder, may not be man-slaughter; it may be a lawful killing, or it may be felopious, according to the facts :

it is homicide for the sheriff to hang a mun under a decree of court after trial ; that is a homicide, because it takes the life of a man; but it is not murder and it is no manslaughter, because it is the taking of Murder is the felonious killing of any human being, with malice aforethought either express or implied - it is this ingred ient of malice which constitutes murder when human life is taken. Malice is ex press when one person takes the life of another out of spite or revenge ; when that s the motive, the malice is express; bu ing is not murder; malice is essential to be thoroughly and carefully looked into.

Lawful homicide is either justifiable or xcusable : justifiable homicide is the taking of human life in pursuance of sentence of law, as when a sheriff executes the

THE CONTINENTAL RAILROAD.

It appears that Mr. Day, the president of the old Continental R. R. Co. has lately come to full life and financial health again. About 1869 there was quite an excitement about this Co. and considerable money was spent. It died out after the failure of Jay Cooke. In 1875 it was revived again only to gasp for breath and go back into a comatose state, but now it has all the malice ; that is where there is a provoca-tion, passion engendered, and, by reason of that provocation, the person who is incensed, before there is room for passion to cool, while yet smarting under the provation, takes lite : here the law, making al.
