The incident, which probably has not a duplicate in history, recalls one of a somewhat similar character with regard to a horse. He was grazing, and had on a halter with a short rein dangling from his head. The horse's tail was short and stubby, and in throwing his head around to scare off a fly, the bridle rein got hitched over the tail. The horse finding his head fastened, became excited, gave a sud-den and violent jerk of his head, which broke his neck and resulted in instant death .-- Winston (N. C.) Sentinel.

The Phonopore.

"There seems to be no end," says the St. Jame's Gazette, "to the marvels of electrical science. We have long known that, inexplicable as it seemed, messages could be sent through a wire in opposite directions at the same moment. But now we have Mr. Langdon Davies utilizing for tele-graphic purposes a form of electric force which can be separated almost from the ordinary electric current, and both directions. Moreover, when the line at either end was disconnected, so that there was no closed circuit, and telegraphic messages were therefore entirely impossible, the phonopore worked as successfully as ever."

Approved April Among the numerous collectors of curiosities of every kind who abound m Paris, there is one wealthy virtuoso who amuses himself by collecting deaths heads and skeletons fanastical ly carved or modeled in marble, earthen ware, wood or precious stones. These he has gathered together in a kind of museum of death, which at first sight seems hideous and "macabre," but on closer inspection proves highly inter-esting. Some of the heads have been detached from these old medizeval rosary-beads which were usually ornamented on one side, with the profile of a king or a saint, and on the other with the grinning face of a skeleton engaged in taking from off his bones the "conquer worms" which have been claiming him as their own. The collector has given a lugubrious reality to the objects in his museum by placing skulls bere and there among them the

The best way to fend mangold-, says Professor Stewart, is to run them through a pulper and then mix this pulp with the rations of grain or ground feed and cut hay. This beat pulp will not only give a relish to the feed but it contains pectic acid, which is a digester of other to ds Four quarts of this pulp given twice per day is sufficient to mecomplish the great benefit for which roots should be fedto cleanse the stomach, prevent constiation and act as a digester for other food. The mixing in with other food is the true way to feed roots. When fed alone and in a large quantity roots are a poor food, but as a small part of the rations they have an important office

If the plants should freeze, as soon as you discover it put them in a dark room, or the cellar, where the temperais but little above freezing and ture sprinkle thoroughly with cold water. In most cases, such plants as geran-iums, abotilons and the more hardy kinds can be saved in this way, and often quite tender kinds will come out with little or no injury. The frost must be extracted gradually and with applications of as little heat as possible. Keep them away from light and warmth for two or three days If the tops should wilt, you may feel certain that If the tops they cannot be saved, so cut them off at once. The roots may not be damaged much, and if they are not, they will soon send up sprouts.

Rich foods, such as grain, oil meal, etc., can be fed with greater profit to cows when botter is the object than when cheese or milk for sale is the end desired. The quantity of oil in milk can be greatly increased by rich food, but the casein varies little. Watery foods, such as roots, green forage and brewers' grains, are credited with pro-ducing a large flow of milk, poor in fats, but containing the usual amount of casein. Hence in the cheese dairy such foods are desirable and more profitable than grain for feeding. But the butter maker will find it profitable to feed largely of the richer foods. Ragweed is the great bane of our grain stubble. A Decision that Pension Money is Liable to Seizure as Any Other Money.

In deciding the suit of Mason C. Rhodes against Eben Rozelle, the Supreme Court settled two important questions regarding attachments of pension funds, one of which arose for the first time in Pennsylvania.

The statute provides that "no money due or to become due to any pensioner shall be liable to attachment, levy or seizure under any legal or equitable process whatever, but shall inure wholly to the benefit of such pensioner." The two questions were, whether the money was subject to seizure under any form of judicial proceeding, and whether it was liable to be taken under an attachment execution.

The Supreme Court decides both questions in the affirmative. Judge Clark says that the exemption provided by statute will only protect the fund whilst in the course of transmission to the pensioner. After that it is liable to seizure as other money."
