Robert A Otz. Architect of the Still

Robert A. Otz of West Hoboken, was the architect of the new silk mill, now in course of erection at Sixth and West streets and has been coming here every month t inspect the work. He made many friends here among those who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. On Monday evening Mr. G. S. Robbins received a telegram from Mr. Stapter, one of the Silk Mill Co., saying that Mr. Otz was dead. A lette received Wednesday morning gives the fol lowing particulars from a Hoboken paper Edward Otz, the owner of a silk mill in West Hoboken, recently had a bridge built at the entrance of his factory. While Robert Otz, his brother, who is an architect, and Julius Mahler, the superintendent of th mill were standing under the arch of the bridge a workman wheeled a heavy cornice upon the structure, which suddenly col lapsed, burying the two men under the ruins. A number of factory hands went to work at once to extricate them but when found Otz and Mahier were dead. Both o them were terribly bruised about the head and body. The man who wheeled the cornice on the bridge escaped with a few scratches. It is thought that the mortal etween the bricks of the arch was not dry and that consequently the structure could not support the weight which was place upon it.

"I say, Watkin, you have shown a little cross-voting lately. What are we to consider you now-Conservative or Radical, Whig or Tory?" Sir Edward Watkin-"My Lord you must not consider me Con servative or Radical, Whig or Tory, I am for the Union-of France and England; I am a Channel-tunnelist."

Tremlow-"Gone completely, Siggy!" Sigamund-"What is it? I saw you an hour ago, and you were getting on swimmingly with that stunning Mershmallow girl Tremlow-"So I was, me deah boy so I was; but just when I began to get over my bashfulness a little, she turned around and asked me if I wouldn't like to come over and play with her little sister some afternoon."

"I don't see how I can go," said Mrs. McStyle; "really I have nothing to wear," 'Nothing to wear!" exclaimed Mr. McS.; where is your cream satin?" "Why, John, how ridiculous you are! You know that that is worn threadbare!" "I don't see how that can be. You have not worn it above three times." "Very true; but then, think of the times I had to try it on while it was making."

"Of course I see you're joking," said Mrs. R., with a knowing look, interrupting her nephew, who had just commenced , reading aloud the title of a paragraph in a newspaper, "A University for Wales." You can't take me in quite so easily. Upiversity for whales, indeed? And yet." she added reflectively; "when I was in Cornwall, I heard them frequently speak of a 'school of herrings.' So you may be right after all."

Two brothers, William and Stepher Grant lived on contiguous farms in New Brunswick. William had a lawsuit with a man named Somers, and defeated him. Somers started to drive home from town one day, and overtook a son of his enemy. The boy was unknown to him. Although knowing Somers well, the boy asked for a ride, resolving to be very careful to hide his identity. After driving a short distance Somers said, "Let's see you are a Grant, ain't you? Whose son are you?". The boy realizing that the crisis had come, resolved to be equal to it and answered, "I'm Uncle Steve's son!" I am sorry to add that the man had so little sense of humor that he put the boy out of the wagor.
