landlord tried to dissuade me; his account of the lonely and desolate road and of the frightful things which had happened on it, of the murders and midnight horors which hung over it, could not turn me from my purpose. Even the thought that I must pass by the haunted rock, in the dark alone and with no hope of aid, should I require it, that I must ride through passes which the village legends peopled with spirits and ghosts of the departed travelers, could not deter me. I spurred onward amid the dark forebodings of those assem's led to witness my rash departure, my landlord's prophecy of a parture, my landlord's prophecy of a landlord in the total the was gond travelers and that my life might be saved. I struggled to free myself once more: struggled to free myself once more: struggled and writhed until my heart nearly burst through my body, but in vain. Just then a new sound caught with a charming girl I used to meet at balls and parties. I found out that she reciprocated my sentiments, and obtained her permission to speak to the hovel. And now I saw his face grinning at me through the window. Making one last superhuman effort I uttered a fearful shriek. The madman leaped in at the window and at the same and of my absence of mind. The dainty figure, with its blue eyes and waving hair, rose before my eyes, and so vivid hair, rose before my eyes, and so vivid was the vision that I spoke her name half alond. The sound of my own voice startled me, and, looking up for the first time. I saw that the sky was growing black, the wind was howling and rumbling, distant thunder was in

It had come-the storm which my landlord had foretold. I spurred on my horse; a big drop of rain splashed over my face; the darkness thickened; and at the same instant through the gloom loomed up the outlines of the huge boulder, which a turn in the road had befere hidden from my sight. A slight shiver crept over me as I recallthe tales connected with it and thought upon my own lonely situation. Something of this feeling seemed to enter into my horse, for as we neared the rock, shrouded in darkness, he trembled from head to foot. Using all my strength I forced him past it and at the same instant there sounded upon my ear a low burst of laughter iar in its tone as to send an icy which those sounds proceeded, but all was silent and deserted as the grave. form must have been swallowed strange feeling of dread weighed on my heart, vague and indefinite, and the night grew blacker and blacker.

The storm drew nearer, and my every effort was now directed to gain some place of shelter from the rain. I looked in vain for a light in the distance; all was black and desolate: torrents of rain poured down, soaking me to the skin; thunder crashed, and my poor borse galloped as for his life. Once, between the thunder peals, I eemed to hear that same low, mad laugh in my ear, and shuddering, I wildly spurred my poor horse. Just then a vivid flash of lightning illumined the road, disclosing a hat about 100 feet in advance; a second flash enabled me to reach the opening which had once been a door; but the whole miserable place was in a ruinous condition For years it had been abandoned to wind and weather.

Fearfully I entered, and found my self in the largest of the two rooms which the hovel boasted. The ceiling was broken away and the rain poured in upon the rotting floor and best through the broken window.

Nothing more wild could be imagin-ed, but still I welcomed it, and, turning the poor horse loose outside, I passed into the inner room. A lightning flash illumined it, and standing boit upright against the opposite wall, I torted by a smile of wicked cunning,

This time I tried to rise, in vain; a fearful weight was on my chest. Straining open my eyes I beheld in the light of the moon, which now shone through the window that same man's face bending over mine. Terrified beyond expression, I struggled to free myself of the creature upon me; but my arms and legs were fast bound; the same cunning smile distorted the face, and the leering eyes rolled as I struggled vainly. I strove to shrick but the sound came not; a faint gurgle was the only result of my frantic effort. At the same instant the creature

A Massacre of Indians.

DRRIBLE CRIME OF SOME OF THE WHITE SETTLERS OF PENNSYLVANIA.

The Paxton church is about three stone, joined by the lime which that stone can make when burned, and over the doors and windows are limestone arches holding out wonderfully well. The church is perhaps sixty feet long by thirty-five or forty feet wide, and only one story high, with a slate roof recently added, and with two chimneys down at the bottom of the slope on each side of the roof, showing that it is found that there are 9,091 miles of star routes, or horse power service, but, while containing the greatest number of miles, it only costs $274,506.30.

The length of the service is 7,077 miles, and it costs for each year $923,-693.30. so peculiar in its tone as to send an icy shudder through me. A something that was not human sounded in it. It was fiendish—devilish. Conquering my momentary weakness I strained my eyes to pierce the darkness in the hope of discovering the shape from fore the North Irish of Scotch extraction who people the neighborhood set tled thereabout, for they were a people of the hills. They had learned in Ire-land rough, individual retalisting habits, and when they found themselves in Pennsylvania they soon began to hate both the Quakers of English stock and the new Dutch. Some years before the American revolution they resolved to kill the Christian Indians on the east side of the Susquehanna river, chiefly because they were Indians, and some other Indians, acting under the stimulus of the civilized states of Europe, like France, had come into that region and killed some white people. Taking the view now generally accepted by violent folks that all negroes are black, and therefore of the same moral com-position, and that all Indians are of the same family, and that one deserves to die for another, these men of the Paxton meeting who prayed to God and asked for mercy resolved to go and kill the Indians at the mouth of the Conestoga creek, which runs into the Susquehanna below Lzncaster. They went there and killed all the Indians they could find—children, women and men. The Pennsylvania authorities had a shibboleth regarding Indians and with drew the remnant of these Indians to Lancaster jail. Thereupon the Paxton youths resolved to go down to Lancas-ter and kill the Indians in the jail. The preacher at Paxton church came ont with his horse and tried in vain to make these young people stay at home. They asked him to lead them to the massacre and told him to get out of the and, as the darkness fell again, a road anyway or they might shoot him. So they went down to Lancaster and So they went down to Lancaster and Made desperate by the terrors of the night and of my loneliness, I struck a match and rushed forward; but the people were going to church in Lan-caster, these lads broke into the prison but is was equally tenantless. Full of there, in cold t lood, dispatched all wonder and strange forebodings I chose a dry spot and threw myself upon the floor and tried to sleep. Vain endeavor; the figure haunted me, and often, as fatigue overpowered me and sleep seemed on the point of relieving me, the memory of that laughter would ring through my brain, and I would start wildly up to find myself would ring through my brain, and I would start wildly up to find myself alone upon the floor with the storm would take the town and bring a new era into the world. There, between persuasion and a show of opposition, they were stopped and a great danger averted. All this happened about 1757 twenty years before the battle of Brandywine, which happened on the soil of Pennsylvania.

ONE NIGHT OF MY LIFE

A NEVER-TO-BE-FORGOTTEN EXPERIENCE WITH A MADMAN.

My darling Alice—I will try and be with you to night. My business takes me to a small town about twenty miles from your house, and I could not bear to be so near you without looking into your sweet eyes and hearing you say that you are true to me, so I shall ride over in the atternoon, and God willing, shall hold you in my arms to-night.

Having despatched my day's business and sent this letter to my sweetheart I, the Jack therein mentioned, hastened to hire a horse for the purpose of riding the twenty miles which separated me from Alice, my betrothed bride. As my business—which was that of traveling agent for a prosperous house—obliged me to be often away from home a chance like this to see Alive was very precious to me.

The following story is told in the newly-published "Random Recotlec-tions of Courts and Society," of Baron de Bourgoing: "I am extremely dis-trait," he said "and my marriage was the result of my absence of mind. When I was a young man I fell in love parture, my landlord's prophecy of a sudden and violent storm ringing in my ears as I went. I treated these superstitions tales as merely the inventions of ignorant villagers, and the sounds which were reported to issue from the haunted reck, as, at best, coming frem the throat of some human enemy, against whom a pistol would be most effective.

There were still two hours of daylight before me, and as I rode along I was lost in thought of my sweetheart. I seemed to see her standing on her is sudden and violent storm ringing in more.

When consciousness returned I was lying upon a bed in my sweetheart's own pretty room, and she with tears in her gentle eyes, was watching my slow return to life.

I learned afterwards, when my strength returned, that the madman had escaped from an asylum in the neighborhood, and being missed, his keeper, attracted by the sight of the flames, arrived just in time to save me from the horrible fate which seemed to await me. I knew no more.

As the door opened I ran to greet my finance—it was another young lady—your mother, my child," he continued, suavely smiling at Mile. de Bourgoing.

I had abstractedly come to the wrong father and been given to the wrong wite; but of course I could not retract or put upon the young person the indignity of refusing her. She did not live long," he added with great serenity. "Pray take some more wine!"—London Life.

The first Liar has no Chance-

In the early days Kline's ranch, in south western Colorada, was a famous stopping-place for the stage coaches, and there was always a goodly (and somewhat diversified) assemblage of travelers around the fireside every evening. One evening a tourist, who had been developed to the course, who had been devoting the summer to trout-fishing in the Cimarron, was tellimg some pretty good-sized fish stories to a long-taired frontiersman, who, to a long-taired frontiersman, who, while listening, was evidently studying how he might "see" the tourist and "raise him" on the size of his yarn. The tourist ended. The frontiersman shifted his quid of tobacco to the other cheek, and said: "Well, mister, them was pretty good-sized trout ye caught; but, Lord! ye should ha' bin with me up at the mouth of the Columby, in Oregon. Why, we used to ketch salmon there every morni'n that would mon there every morni'n that would run all the way from ninety to a hundred and fifty pounds."

For a moment the tourist was silent, then, looking sadly at the triumphant frontiersman he said: My friend, Inherited Diseases.

No fact of nature is more pregnant with awful meaning than the fact of the inheritance of disease.

Modern science, which has illuminated so many dark corners of nature, has shed a new lighten the ominous words of the Scriptures. "The sine of the fathers, shall be visited upon the children unto the third and fourist generation." Prity per cont. of cases of consumption, cancer and accofule, run in families through inheritance. Insanity is hereditary in a marked degree, but, fortunately, like many other hereditary diseases, tends to wear itself out, the stock becoming extinct. A distinguished scientist truly says: "No organ or texture of the body is exempt from the chance of being the subject of the body are more chronic diseases, which permanently modify the structure sud functions of the body are more or less liable to be inherited. The important and far reaching practical deductions from such facts are obvious to reflecting minds, and the tendent of the subject of intense interest to all. Fertunately nature has provided a remedy, which experience has attested as infallible, and the runedy is the world-famous Swift's Specific, a pure vegetable compound—nature's antidote for all blood poisons. To the affileted it is a blessing of inestimable value. An interesting treaties on "Blood and Bkin Diseases" will be mailed free by addressing

12 Pounds of Tumor

12 Pounds of Tumor

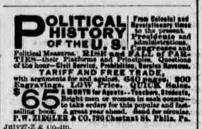

Is a hideous thing to have attached to a human frame, yet Mr. Reuben severance, of Upper Still-Water, plant of oil Town, Me., had one in his groin which he carried for about ten years. It began to form about fourteen years ago, being at first hardly larger than a pea. Mr. Severance, in his sworn statement before ex-Governor B. F. Diavia, of Maine says:

"At first it did not trouble me much but as it grew in size it was accompanied by severe darting pains. Food did not digest; had attacks of dizriness roaring sounds in ears and passed sleepless nights. In 1886 tumor weighed several pounds and extended to knee. Now least exertion caused intense, tearing pain like sticking of needles in flesh. Abandoned hope and took to bed. Physicians declined to cut it out, saying I was too old and weak to survive. Am 76 years of age. Some one recommended frown's Sarsaparilla. I experienced immediate change for better. Appetite returned; food ceased to trouble me; ringing noises left my head, and bost of all tumor began to shrivel up and disappear. It is now and has been for some time entirely gone. Can and do do good days work. I say god bless the man who invented this medicine. He should wear a crown. I mean always to keep by me a bottle of Brown's Sarsaparilla while I live."

With this statement we have paper signed by postmaster, druggist, as well as seven of the town officials, stating they know the above to be true, and ex-Gov. Davis also adds his evidence. There is no case of blood disease which cannot be cured by
