ODD LITTLE STORIES FROM THE RUINS OF INSTOWN-THE FOURTEENTH REGIMENT'S NEW COOK

Out of the great flood the fourteen th regiment has gathered a mascot in the person of Shad Lewis Jones, a colored man. The fellow lived former-ly on Cinder street, in Johnstown, where he lost his wife and one child. The prohibitory amendment has ma-jorities in 20 counties, and 38 counties "Shad," which is the nickname the gave majorities against it. The poli-soldiers have conferred upon him, is a tical complexion of the consties voting which is the nickname the character from the soles of his large feet to the top of his cocoanut shaped

When he talks about the flood and tells how he lost his wife, his voice be-comes tremulous with pathos and sin-ere emotion. "Ah, gentlemen," he will say, "I loved my wife dearly, and I stayed with her on the roof as long as there was room for us both. But when the water came so near and so high that I water came so near and so high that I can counties of the State, cast, in saw we wouldn't be able to hold on round numbers, 155,000 of the 190, both, I jumped off to save myself." 000 majority against prohibition.

"But why did you not stay with your wife and drown with her sooner than let her perish by herselft" "Well, now, look here, sir; those The vote is unexpectedly large uni-formly throughout the State. Indeed,

And that is the only excuse he will of people were indifferent on the quesoffer. But after the waters began to recede he went anxionsly looking about, and he never rested until his wife was found and buried. It was then Dr. Foster, of the Fourteenth re-giment, found him, and he got him at once installed as cook. In that capa-city Shad has not only been the man city Shad has not only been the man who furnished the table with all the tional prohibition. The old-line Pres byterians were divided, with the Unit-

Black bass, says the Harrisburg Independent, has become most abundant in the Su-quebanna river and its tributaries and its introduction into that river is not understood as it should be by those who enjoy the sport of its catch or the luxury of its eating. Colon-el James Worral, who for years acted as Fish Commissioner and who really organized the present fishing system, writing the laws which control it first introduced the black bass into the Susquehanna river and other streams of Pennsylvania. The veteran hydraulic engineer and scientist is dead long since but it is due to his memory that this fact should be known to the public as well as to fisherman. The black bass of Pennsylvania should be known as the "Worral black bass" : at least its propagation in our waters by that dis ciple of Izaak Walton should not be forgotten by those who regale them-selves on its food.

Whitehall township, were on their return home by buggy from a trip to Emaus, they were treated to a strange and rare sight on the public road near the farm of Mr. Charles Glick, in Western Salisbury, at present in the tenacy of Poor Director Willoughby Guth. It was nothing other than a fierce combat between a spot-ted snake and a crow. When distant perhaps 200 yards from the scene of conflict Mr. Henninger saw the crow in the act of flapping its wings over some object on the road bed, it ever and anon lifting it up and drop-ping it again. At a distance it first seemed to him as if the bird was playing with a teamster's lash. On coming closer he however found that it was a snake at least 31 feet in length. Ob-serving that the fight was a terrific one, he became interested in the con-flict, and stopped to witnes the ending of it. It was evident that the crow had the best of the fight, it using its strong bill with terrific effect on the tal, heating it to a high temperature head of the reptile, which though it tried hard to avoid the darts of its ad-air, which on sunny days rises to 90° wounds. It was a nip and tuck strug-to be heated. gle for a long time, and not being able to waste the time to see the final ending of it, and sympathizing with the crow in the contest, Mr. Henninger finally started his horse and directed the wheels of the buggy in such a way that the snake was passed over diagonally. Its body was nearly severed in two thereby, and it was thus valued at $150,000,000. In Scotland the societies are reported to have r on the approach of a team quit the road and flew upon a fence some distance away. Mr. Henninger drove on about a hundred yards, and then stopped again to see if the bird would return to prosecute the contest to a finish. Sure enough in the course of a few minutes it winged its way back, and after giving the reptile a few more whacks with its sharp bill it picked it up and flew away, doubtless to make of it its evening meal. We never before heard of crows attacking snakes. The one in question however made a bold fight, and it is likely that such attacks are not an uncommon secur ce. While the fight was on the crow ce. larted about over the snake so rapidly ed observer.
