"THIS MEANS MOST BARBAROUS"

Is What Commissioner Gibbons Calls

Capital Punishment by Electricity-In teresting Testimony in the Reference Before Referee Baker. NEW YORK, July 16.-Referee Baker, ap pointed by the court to examine into the merits or demerits of the new mode of capital

tigation, and listened to some interesting Bourke Cockran stated, before the refersace began, that he wished it to be distinctly understood that he was fighting hard—aye, yeary hard—to save the condemned murderer, Kemmler, from an awful fate, which would

Commissioner Gibbons, when called upon to testify, was strong in his denunciation of the use of electricity for capital punishment. "I have not the slightest hesitancy in saying that this means of killing a man is most bar barous," he remarked, "and I trust that it never will be enforced." Electrician John W. Noble was the next to tell what he knew of the evil effects of elec-tricity, and he cited for example the experiments conducted by a former witness, Harold P. Brown, on dogs, at Edison's works. The witness went on to describe the fearful suf ferings of the canines, which kicked and squirmed like eels out of water when the electricity was applied to their bodies. In fact Mr. Brown declared the dogs were not killed outright, but suffered a lingering death.

Expert McAddle's Testimony.
"Now, Mr. McAddle, tell the referee what you know about the power of electricity and how it sometimes acts," said Bourke Cockran, now it sometimes acts, "and Bourke Cockran, as the witness took his seat.

Mr. McAddie describes himself as an expert on "atmospherical electricity." For seven years, he stated, he had made a thorough study of the matter. He described the effect of electricity on a human being as a "current charge." The first effect produced was unconsciousness, the second a paralysis of the nerves and muscles, and the third a unconsciousness, and madeles, and the third a unconsciousness, and madeles, and the third a unconsciousness. uspension of respiration and circulation. He doubted if the machine proposed to be used by the state would kill a man, as the structure of buman beings differed so radi-

Two points in fact were involved, he said.

First, that of the resistance of the man, and second that of the course of the current. The witness believed that one half of a man might be paralyzed and the other half retain all its natural functions. Then, again, science had not as yet demonstrated the fact that s current can, with any certainty, be driven through the vital part of a man's anatomy. Continuing, Mr. McAddie said that assuming the condemned criminal was not killed outright the effect of the shock would be a slow carbonizing of his body. The Effect Upon Human Beings.

The Effect Upon Human Beings.

The witness then described a case of lightning striking a woman, throwing her some three feet, where she was left unconscious, with no pulse and no perceptible action of the heart. She turned purple in the face, but after a lapse of some hours was resuscitated and finally recovered. When the witness was asked if the electrodes in the death dealing machine would have a tendency to burn the skin he replied that it was a hard matter to determine. The west spongers are matter to determine. The wet sponges ap-plied to the electrodes could be well dampyouldn't be surprised if the electricity burned up the sponges.

When asked by Mr. Cockran if the witne that ever known of cases of people being struck by lightning and thought to be dead, he said that he had. "No instrument that I know of is certain to kill," said the witness. I know that people are killed by electricity but how, I have not been able to ascertain
