Apathy of Americans Regarding Public Rights.

The apathy of the American citizen at large as to public rights has also been a matter of remark, as contrasted with the tone prevailing in England in that regard, or in this country during the post-revolutionary period. Public action is shirked, and people of education and character, through apathy or absorption in private interests, allow themselves to be governed by vicious despoilers. The Irish people, who have immigrated here in herds, with their energy and cohesive force, have utterly driven, so far as our seaboard cities are concerned, the old colonial descendants from the administration of public affairs. As regards the city of New York, which may be considered typical in this matter, Prof. Bryce, the philosophic English observer, remarks that there exists in that city "such a wretched Sabbath of jobbing, bribing, thieving, and prostitution of legislative power to private interest as the world has seldom seen." The above criticism applies also, in a great measure, to national politics, and the present jobbery and general venality are in terrible contrast with the high-minded and patriotic administration of public affairs during the early years of the Republic. Even the upper chamber of our national Sanhedrin is now notoriously filled, with some exceptions, by men who have gained their legislative places through their enormous wealth, which has been so applied as to crush competition, and legislative action, there, is now controlled mainly by those whose merit is neither character or statesmanship. A former clerk of the United States Senate recently stated that national politics were dying out at Washington. "It is rare to find a man," said he, "in either branch of Congress, who engages in legislation with anything but a personal view."—From "Some American Changes," by James W. Gerard, in July LIPPINCOTT'S.
