An immense house greeted the initial performance of J. Z. Little's Grizzly Nabob, the lucky prospector of the Rocky mountains. The play portrays the nobler heroic features, the rugged kindness and stern honesty of human life in the western mining camps in contrast with the treachery and baseness of the desperado element. The story is strong, and told in beautiful language; striking scenes and realistic situations, together with songs, dances and many comicalities, give a pleasing variety to this truly American drama. -N.
