Every inch of space for seats at the tables was occupied, and there were at least 300 battle-scarred veterans, some with an arm left on some battle-field or in some hospital, Mobile Bay or some other sea, and some with only one leg. The presiding officer, Major-General Wagner Swayne, one of the most genial of companions, is one of the "battle-scarred" veterans, having lost his right leg in action at River's Bridge, S.
