A Question of Nerve.

"Have you got any nerve?" asked my friend Simpson, as we halted before a alson in Toughville, Mont. "What if I haven't?" I answered evas-

"I asked for information. You're a tranger here, you know, and you don't tuck your pants in your boots, or talk about your private graveyard, or anything like that, and as I've got to go in here and interview the proprietor I won't take you along unless your nerve will stand it."

"Go in," I answered laconically. We entered a long, low ceiled room with a bar at one end. Several card tables were scattered about at which gentlemen of rather unsavory appearance and reckless manners were playing. While my friend was transacting his business with the proprietor I drew a chair into a corner and tried to appear perfectly at home. Taking a cigar from my pocket I calmly placed it between my lips and lighted it, when-whiz! it was knocked clear out of my mouth by a pistol ball.

I never so much as winked an eye! I did not even turn to see who had done the firing, but, with the greatest coolness, I drew another cigar from my pocket and lighted it. I leaned back in my chair and smoked with extreme nonchalance -I don't think I have ever, before or since, been so utterly and so hopelessly nonchalant as upon the occasion set forth.

As I smoked, the ashes naturally accumulated upon the end of my weed and I was just thinking of knocking them off when that unknown friend with his convenient pistol performed the service for Every one in the saloon was looking in my direction, but I did not show the barest tip of a white feather. I puffed away, with head thrown back, and a dreamy, contented expression on my face that I would have tried in vain to produce under ordinary circumstances.

Again the ashes accumulated, and again that timely bullet removed them. At this stage I found myself wondering how I was going to keep my nerve when that cigar had burned down to a mere stump and my friend's marksmanship would be required to pick it out from between my teeth.

But I was equal to the emergency, and when my cheroot was two-thirds gone I held it between my thumb and forefinger while the unknown shot it out with a skill that was remarkable. Then I dusted my hands, brushed the ashes from my clothes, and joined my friend at the door. Before we could leave the room, how-ever, a man in a blue shirt and buckskin leggins, carrying a six shooter in his hand, approached and embraced me,

"Say, pard, dern my pictur if I hain't clean gone on yer nerve. Here's a buckeye that I've carried ever since I broke jail in Ohio en come out hyer. Take it en wear it in yer pants pocket fer the sake of Vermillion Pete, the all 'round terror of Bitter Creek. An', pard?"

"Say, I want yer to stand up there in the corner en let me shoot a dime off yer

"Come on here," said my friend Simpson, as he yanked me through the door by the tail of my coat, without giving me time to frame a reply.

But I was glad he did it. A dime isn't very thick, and then Vermillion Pete might have missed it.

Hint for an Artist.

There was a decoration on a Inncheon table one day last week that was not ordered from florist or caterer. An uptown woman, entertaining a half dozen friends, had herself seen to the laying of the table early in the forenoon and closed and darkened the dining room till luncheon should be served. A few minutes before that time she left the parlor and ran down stairs for a final inspection "Bring the clams in, "she said to the maid. "I will open the room and luncheon can be served at once," and she hurried into the spartment, raising the shades and opening the blinds.

And then she stopped and said "Oh!" for there at the daintily laid table, his little high chair drawn up to its occasional place by her cover, sat her 3 year old boy sound asleep, his brown haired head almost touching the cloth, and one moist, pudgy hand resting fairly on its immaculate whiteness, and clasping between the limp fingers a red rose which he had evidenfly admired and pulled from the center piece, as its trailing way was clearly marked across the table. It was a critical moment for the mother. "If I take him up," she thought quickly, "the traces of his presence will be disfiguringly there, and it is too late to relay the table. "I'll leave him just as he is; they are all mothers upstairs. and will see the picture he makes before they see the print of his fingers on my cloth." And the clams were put on. and the luncheon was announced, and Master Arthur was a very much surprised boy when he was awakened a few minutes later by a rain of soft kisses from a bevy of admiring women.-New York Times.

"There's Many a Slip 'Twixt the Cup and the Lip."

Ancœus, king of the Leleges in Samos (an island in the Grecian Archipelago), planted a vineyard; and so heavily did he oppress his slaves, that one of them, it is said, prophesied to him that he would never live to taste the wine thereof. When the wine was made, he sent for his slave and said: "What do you think of your prophecy now?" The slave made answer: "There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip." The words were scarcely uttered when Ancœus was informed that a wild boar had broken into his vineyard, and was laying it waste. Ancœus, setting down the cup untasted, hastene ! to attack and drive out the boar; but he was killed in the encounter.

No Word sWasted. The tombstone man elevated his eyebrows inquiringly. The doctor, who had just come from the fine house round the corner, shook his head decidedly and passed on .-Chicago Tribune.

Nearly every pattern of $ Horse Blanket is imitated in color and style. In most cases the imitation looks just as good as the genuine, but it hasn't the warp threads, and so lacks strength, and while it sells for only a little less than the genuine it isn't worth one-half as much. The fact that SA Horse Blankets are copied is strong evidence that they are THE STANDARD, and every buyer should see that the A trade mark is sewed on the inside of the Blanket.
