Electricity in the Country.

The following editorial from the Philadelphia Press of last Sunday, hits the nail on the head, and it is worthy of careful perusal. Just now it is especially commended to the Town Council of Bloomsburg. Applications have been and are likely to be made to it, for valuable franchises, and before action is taken measures should be decided upon, by which the municipality will be not only protected, but amply compensated. No hasty action should be taken. The Press says:

"Every one who keeps up with the news of the day must be aware of the great number of projects now on foot for the extension of electric railways into the country. The newspapers are frequently compelled to chronicle the formation of new companies and the Legislatures in some States are burdened with applications for charters. Only a few days ago a charter was issued at Harrisburg for the longest electric railway in the State. It is to run from Scranton to Northumberland, traversing five counties and having a length of nearly 100 miles. Ohio has several such projects on foot, and capitalists are eagerly seeking the investments encouraged by the success which has attended those already built.

It is in New England, however, that the greatest expansion, in this direction is seen. Lines radiating from all the large cities and the suburban towns are proposed. One is intended to connect Boston with Concord, N. H., by running through the Merimac Valley and taking in the intervening towns. It will probably be extended to the White Mountains. The groups of villages in the central and western part of Massachusetts are also planning electric circuits that will connect a number of towns and communities. The Connecticut Legislature is so besieged with applications for charters that it has been compelled to appoint a special committee on the subject. Vermont and New Hampshire are likewise the home of many similar schemes to supply rural neighborhoods with electric railways.

There is much to be said in favor of this rapid extension of traction by electricity. It opens up a means of communication between nearby places long desired. The steam railroad is too expensive for such purposes there not being enough traffic and freight to pay for the building and operation. But an electric road can be built cheaply and operated economically. It offers cheap and quick transit and by penetrating neighborhoods that have known nothing but the stage coach or the farmer's wagon relieves that monotony and isolation that are among the chief objections to rural life. As it is the intention to run light freight cars on many of these roads for carrying farm produce to market they will become a direct aid to production and will increase the value of every acre of land in the neighborhood they drain.

All this and much in addition can be said in favor of the extension of electric roads in the country. But there is another side also. There is a probability that many communities in their eagerness to obtain rapid transit in this way may give away valuable privileges which they will regret when too late. This side of the case is well presented in the annual report of the New Hampshire Railroad Commissioners. After stating that steam railroads are compelled to buy their right of way, construct bridges, roadbeds and fences, the report proceeds to ask if there is any reason why electric railroads should not do the same. They propose to do exactly the same kind of a business, carry passengers and freight, and why, the Commissioners inquire, should the electric "be given exclusive and very valuable rights and privileges in the highways to the discomfort and damage of the public?"

This is a question which every community and every Legislature should ask itself before it gives away privileges that it will be difficult or impossible to recover. The country can learn a valuable lesson from the cities in this matter. Many of the latter were so eager to obtain rapid transit within their limits by means of street cars and communication with other cities by steam railroads that they recklessly voted away rights which they now vainly regret. This ought to be a warning to rural communities. Electric railways along their highways will undoubtedly help them in many ways, but on the other hand these roads are likely to return a good profit and they should not be given rights for which they can afford to pay. There should be reciprocity in this matter."

Dr. G. C. Osmond, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
