The Dear Old Lady's Treasured Finery Is Seasonable Now.

(COPYRIGHT, 1893 )

Fortunate above all others is the girl who has or had a grandmother. What stores there are lovingly put away in the dear old lady's cedar chests of just such things as the girls sensonable splendor!

There is grandmother's muff. Of course, in these mellow October days. when the dry leaves rustle along garden walks in the wooing breath of zephyrs gentle as June, it is more of over white satin. The sleeves are a burden than benefit, but when chiller full to below the elbow, ending in breezes blow its ample depth and warmth will be as comfortable as they are fashionable, but not more so. And grandmother's "changeable silk." which lies in lavender, to be taken out the ten gown; but it will not seidom with pious, trembling often this winter than ever before. hands, and signed over, and wept over | Let my lady venture forth upon the a little, maybe, for the memories it street and she will be pointed out, in a

GRANDMA'S GIRL LUCKY. day, she gave ten parties and socially pressed her callers to "stay to ten;" but it was not like this, not like those low divans, soft light, noiseless service, the tiny cups, sugarless and creamless, but not always innocent of a dash of some stronger mixture, the languid airs and English accent, and, more typical of the scene than all, the tea gown.

Still speaking of the smart troussenu, and its smartest representative of this interesting class, the tea gown is mod-crately plain of skirt, three full ruffles at the bottom alone breaking its fine lines. A buckle quite four inches long seems to fasten a wide belt of rich are wearing now! What wealth of brown satin. The stuff of the gownit is velvet, by the way, but of a lighter tint-is gathered below the bust, which is crossed by three rows of the darker ruffles, with embroidered edges. There is a square yoke of creamy lace a fall of cream yellow lace, making the hands seem ivory white by contrast. It is not often, perhaps, that so heavy a material as velvet appears in

There seemed a menace in their rustled spirals, which causes a shudder even now, when we are mereifully permitted to know that not quite all of grandmamma's wardrobe is available.

Indeed, at the best, it would not go degenerate days. She had a house dress, trimmed neat for all active uses, a company dress or two for home or abroad, and an evening dress; these at least, perhaps more. But at the most the lucky woman's hair ne'er are flat, wonderfully flat. Flat beyond gowns, yachting, boating, coaching, bieyeling, tennis, walking costumes, pi azza gowns and yet more, even to the dozenth dozen

My lady a la mode is indeed a languid creature at eleven a. m. She rustleth not with starch as did once the dear old lady of the cedar chests. She wears no apron. Her soft, noiseess gown of figured silk falls from waist line to floor in simple, natural lines, trailing a trifle behind-so it was at least with the very prettiest tea gown of the very prettiest trousseau of October as I saw it in the milliner's shop. The sleeves are close to the elbow, above that doubly puffed to form two full globes, the upper almost concealed by the wide collarette of pale creamy lace which falls quite to most inward and peculiar.
the high wrist line in front. Within The trick of most of these the pale of the ordinary bonds of conventionality there is not, could not be, a more beautiful house dress than this and there a bit, if it be only a thread simple' symphony of silk and lace. This, so far as materials go, might all have come from grandma's chest. But it didn't.

That was my lady of the breakfast rolls, cafe au lait and newspaper. Madame at four in the afternoon is more imposing if not more beautiful. Her robe is such a one as grandmamma assuredly never wore. The good old lady drank more tea than we of to-lines of the underskirt, and decorated, if we may use the term, with five the points of a great star from the knee almost to the hem. The points There was a time-we all remember are insisted upon, they are made forcicontrasts of color. Perhaps they are pale green over very dark green, or yellow over dark brown, or vica versa, or even white contrasting sharply with black, a favorite combination of colors this year. With such an overskirt are worn the usual puff sleeves and perky hat.

Or the points may be smaller, and in this case there may be ruffles, one, far toward a fashionable fit-out to-day. two or three, edged with big zigzags Bright and early rose grandmamma, all pointing downward. And then the her shining morning face a lesson to yoke will be pointed, too, and the lace collarette edged with points.

Nature abhors points. In all her laboratories she seldom fashions one.

precedent. And yet nobody would know it from their freakish variety of finished outline. To have been flat and yet not look like it is apparently the deceitful purpose, the daily end and aim of hatdom. No hat has or will have a crown more than half an inch high, many are absolutely flat disks of felt with no crowns at all. Yet all have their flat estate under the pale fingers of the stooping, dark-eyed milliner, dreaming of France and her beloved Gaston or Pierre away beyond there. Perhaps she turns the broad brim sharply up at the left and accentuates it with nigrettes of feathers or ribbon bows. Perhaps she leaves it nearly flat but earls plumes cunningly over the edge and perks pointed bow ends straight up into the air. Perhaps the flaps it up in front into a wide wall of felt over which one can scarcely see the big plumes that deck it. Most often of all she pulls the brim low over the eyes in front and heaves it nigh behind against the plumes and bows and bobbing things on top. And this last is the least trying estate of the flat hat. For the average woman of to-day has a forehead of more than Greeian height. This, indeed, she deftly masks beneath clustering curls low lying against the white, but the flat hat sits too high above her face for beauty of proportion. Particularly is the style trying to high foreheads when the flaring hat brim sonre aleft in front.

There cannot be such variety in make as in fabrics. To the bewildering kaleidoscope of fall cuts and colors the weaver and dychouse chemists have contributed more of charm than the modiste. Beautiful in extreme are the shot silles, the bashet-woven effeets in every kind of goods, shot chewlots and course "drop changeant," spotted muslins and muslins sprigged and polks dotted, velvets, taffetas and foulards, plushes, surahs, of names almost as bewildering as their colors, which gleam and glow and dazzle in the mass with a glow that seems al-

The trick of most of these weaves is to drop into them, into the most unexpected patterns and materials, here or two, of shining silk which catches the light and irradiates the whole. You know how roses are holding their own against and through all the chrysanthemum crazes, and orchid crazes and other dangers, of course? Yellow and very pale pink roses go best with the light greens and dark greens of the season, and with many, perhaps most, of the browns and bronzes. ELLEN OSBORN.

s'pose you know, Virginia dear, Thanksgiving day is almost here.

And now I hope you will not think

Bout what you'll have to eat and drink, Because it isn't right at all. To be a selfish, greedy doll.

First place, you should be very glad For all the blessings you have had. Your pleasant home, your kind mamma. And what a lucky doll you are! You know she lets you have your way About a dozen times a day! She's very, very gen'rous, too, And always shares a treat with you

And here you should be thankful, dear, That turkeys are so good this year.
And sweet-potators too, of course,
And lovely crimson cranberry saucel
And squash, and little saucer-pies, They're always such a great surprise, Ice-cream, and nuts and raisins, tool Oh! I'm so glad I am not you, Because, you see, you dearest sweet, You cannot really, truly eat, And so the thankflest thing is this.

An' he thinks that every minute is jes' sure to be his last!

You can hear Thanksgivin' comin' with a rush an' with a roar, An' the knives an' forks a hummin' as we pass the plate for more! O, it's jolly every minute, in the north an' in the for the turkey-gobbler's in it, an' we're water-in' at the mouth! -Atlanta Constitution IN THE POULTRY YARD.

A Thanksgiving Cinch. We pulled the wishbons. Sue and I—
"I wish to kiss you!" my heart's sigh—
She won; but I've since understood That she was wishing that I would!

"What have I to be thankful for?"
