The Writer Considers Portable Furances Better and Chenper Than Stoves-Dia-grams Showing Location of Different Pipes.

I write for farmers and people of moderate means; the plan described is within the reach of most people. For reconomy and case of putting in operation, the portable furnaces now made by many reliable parties have no superior. A large furnace is needed for n large house—42 inches diameter is an excellent size. My house is of brick, 34x36 feet; stands north and south, front entrance on north side; is two stories, with cellar under the whole; ground floor has parlor the whole length on the west side, two rooms and inclosed porch on east side; second story has four chambers and bathroom; both floors are well and thoroughly warmed with one 42-inch portable furnace.

The proper location of the furnace in the cellar is of the first importance; it should be in the northwest corner, as the high, cold winds come from that quarter, and there is no trouble to get the heat to go in a southerly direction in cold weather. After locating your furnace, dig a hole in the cellar bottom where it is to stand, 8x10 feet and 2 feet deep; wall with brick and floor with same; this is needed to give a proper inclination to the heat pipes, and to keep the furnace from being too near the floor above it. If there is an entry in the middle of the house put a register in the floor at or near the north end of it; this will temper the whole house in cold weather. Heat pipes can be taken from the furnace into all the rooms; these pipes should all have dampers in them in the cellar near the furnace, so as to control the distribution of heat to each room as it may be needed.

Good dry seasoned wood cut in onefoot lengths can be used with great satisfaction; fill the fire pot full of it, and when once well on fire, close all bottom drafts; leave the damper in smoke pipe open just enough to carry off the smoke, and it will run all day without any further care. Such a furnace can be put up complete to warm such a house, with heat pipes and registers to every room, for $300. My fuel (hard coat) for this furnace and kitchen range costs an average of 27 cents a day throughout the year. The cold air is taken from out of doors on the north side of the house to the base of the furnace in a wooden box 8 by 10 inches; the box projects 18 inches from the house, and has a partition in it 2% feet long; the sides of projection are cut sloping, and covered with wire to keep out vermin. By this arrangement all northerly winds are caught and conducted to the furnace; it should have a damper in it to control the air supply in timesof high wind. We have no use for inside doors in this house.

In a warm climate, I believe a furnace in a cellar (north side) directly under the entry, with one hot-air pipe into the entry, will be ample for warming this house comfortably; this can be done for $125 or less.

Fig. 1 is cellar floor, showing smoke pipe and tin pipes for conveying heat to upper floors. Tin pipes are run up each flue to the second or chamber floor, which added much to the cost, as each room thus has its own indepenent heat supply. There is one register in entry and one in dining-room on first floor; two registers in parlor on the west side where flues are marked also two on second floor west, one in

For Milady's Fair Face.

There are few women who have not had at some time or another use for a face powder, even though as a rule they eschew anything on that order. A violet powder which can be commended is composed of wheat starch, three pounds; powdered orris, halfpound. Mix together and add attar of lemon, one-eighth of an ounce; attars of bergamot and cloves, each, one-half drachm. For those troublesome blackheads that so disfigure the face that is blessed with the most classical features the following compound works wonders: Take kaolin, four drachms; glycerine, three drachms; acetic acid. two drachms, and oil of lemon, five drops. Apply this every night and after a few days the black specks can be easily pressed out, or most of them will even come out by washing with pumicestone soap.

Carved Leather Cushions.

EMBOSSED and carved leather cushions decorated in colors are laced together with narrow thongs of leather without a stitch being taken in them; hese are liked for hall seats, for libraries and for men's rooms.
