EVAPORATING FRUIT. 1 Much Better Method Than Outdoor

Drying in the Sun. Fruit is always a precarlous crop. It is abundant one year, and scarce the sext. There is economy in being able to utilize the surplus of a heavy fruit crop. If properly dried by erapora-tion, the surplus may be marketed or used in a time of scarcity. A cheap and effective evaporator may be easily constructed. Have made a waterlight the ressel or pan, itee and a half feet in width and from Drying in the Sun.

two and a half feet in width and from four or five feet in length, and about three inches deep. A small funnel soldered to one corner, must be brough which the pan is to be partialfilled with water. The funnel is an corked up, but a small aperture must be left in the cork for the es-To use this evaporator, one end may be set on a kitchen store, and the other properly supported. The first spread evenly over the pan, and a moderate fire kept up. All kinds of fruit can be speedily and thoroughly dried in from half an hour to three hours. It is necessary to see that the pan is kept constantly half rull of water.

Forecast in Farming.

Forecast in Farming. Keen, practical forcenst is an im-portant factor in every walk of busi-best life, but for the farmer it is al-most indispensable to any rensonable amount of success. Mechanical skill, once it has been fairly mastered, needs next to no thought to keep it up to the point of working efficiency. But farming, as it ought to be, not only requires careful thought, but a very great amount of forethought to make either pleasant or profitable. The work above the level of the merest ludgery is the amount of hearty and exhibitrating mental effort that can be infused into it; that, combined with the sense of duty and the feeling of hope, will, under Providence, make on the farm more really attractive than pursuits apparently much more plasant and alluring. Of all forms of thought, forethought is the most insplring, just as afterthought is gen-erally least pleasant. Of the various nationalities ongaged in farming on his continent, I find the Germans and Scotch, in proportion to their numbers, most successful, and to that sucess their faculty of plodding, com-bined with calculating habits, have, I think, contributed the most. As a friend of mine said lately, "A man must learn somedings effery day, if he wants to make money by farming." The skilled farmer pro-pounds in the quiet of his spare hours the problems of the coming year with which he may need to grapple, and then sits himself to think out, in peraps two or three different lines, solved, and those difficulties met. Wise behind the hand," ready for undness the day after the fair, the num with a dull, sompy sort of brain ahead in a mechanical sort of seeing nothing in particular until strikes a snag or runs his head trainst a wall, and then feels around a dazed sort of way to find out at has struck him. Proper forehat has struck him. in farming goes a long way be-the mere study of possible modes of action. Every possible form of ob-struction is looked at, and plans made for getting round the corner, or, if that is impossible, for making the un-pleasant effects of the collision as weather and good daylight, but when, in the misty darkness all around, you cannot tell whether the mass in your way is an island or an iceberg, the trained captain is ready for the emer-zency, while the fair-weather sailor acts like an imbecile. "Ready, aye ready," is the motto of the Napiers, a handy, is the motio of the Napiers, a family famous in science, in war, in literature, and should be the watch-word of every man who would farm successfully. "Be sure you are right, and then go ahead," is another equal-by valuable maxim, and accredited to Davy Coexistic bat it is each by a Davy Crockett, but it is only by a wide and far-reaching forethought that this certainly can be attained. The results may be much more valu-able and enduring than the thinker almost has ever anticipated. When, more than fifty years ago. Amos truckshanks began with his one Duran helfer to try and build his ideal Shorthorn, he only meant to do the best he could with the materials withis the could with the materials with-is his reach. But he lived to see the triumphs of his plans, and the profit and honor which followed. All the workd now believes in the Scotch Shorthorns, of which he has been, as a see an isomatic that he successful trator. "Learn to labor and to wait." good some and good postry, but the aggest half of the profit of farming abor and much of its real pleasure ast come out of the vigorous exer of the worker's brain, of which sulled forecast is pretty much the masterplece. It is one thing to wait the chance that may turn up, quite mother and a much mobler thing to chit in sure hope for the fruit of the cted and planted in the confidence hat, if not your hand, some other as, would be sure to pluck goodly rad, Richard Waugh in Amorican griculturist.
