THE BAHAMANS.

A Race That Has the Appearance of Being Physiologically Starved.

A most curious specimen of a Bahaman dwelling in a big cement oven, like a cone, at the back of the house. In this the family bread is baked. Bahamans are physiologically starved, and their thin, attenuated forms show it. An unwary diet of fish and fruit is not nourishing enough, and the fact speaks for itself in these islanders. The white Bahamans are homely and sallow unless burned so that the complexion is a thing of the past. They rarely—some never—wear shoes; hence, feet in these latitudes are feet and not merely the ends of legs. I used to gaze in admiration at the feet that daily and nightly visited our schooner. The owners of the appendages could walk where a shod foot could not bear to tread. The skin becomes tougher than leather. Black Bahamans are the finest specimens of the negro race to be seen outside of Africa—strapping fellows with magnificent arms and chests; but they are dreadful beggars and dreadful liars.

It is inconceivable, says the Californian Illustrated Magazine, how simple the Bahamans are. I saw old men in Spanish Wells who had never seen a horse, or a cow, or a wheeled vehicle. Nassau is their Mecca. "Why, boy," said Joe Pindar to me (everybody down here is either a Pindar or a Johnson), "Nassau is a city. Hit 'em six thousand people, hand the streets are so broad carriages kin go along hand leave room for persons to walk hoo beach side."

NEW IRISH BULLS.

As Sent to London "Truth" by Various Correspondents.

Schoolmaster, entering boys' dormitory—"What are you doing out of bed this time of night, Murphy?" "Murphy—" "Oh, sorr, I got out of bed to tuok myself in."

An Irish girl (who is a student at one of the ladies' colleges in Cambridge) mentioned that her college chums often came to her rooms at ten p. m. and drank tea with her. "But can you sleep after taking tea so late?" said one of her hearers. "Oh, yes," replied the girl, "but I always drink oooooo!"

Peter Madigan to Patsy Tooley, whom he has just discharged from his service: "Tary ye wance more, is it? Surra a bit. Look here, Patsy Tooley, ye're such a thievin' schamer, I wouldn't thrust ye again wid an empty box containing shraw."

A—"I hope I will never see you again." B—"And so I, and if I don't see you until I'm dead I'll survive it!" Extract from the letters of a young Irish bride: "We finished our furnishing before going abroad, but there's no end to it. Every day we find something or other we haven't got."

Polite shop assistant: "Madam, I can confidently recommend this silk; it will last forever, and make a petticoat afterwards."

Overheard on an omnibus: "Mrs. X. is much more ladylike than her son."

COUNTRY GIRLS' SHOES.

No Longer Large and Heavy as They Were Ten Years Ago.

The best evidence I know of the progress of education and refinement in the west is shown in the styles of footwear now sold to country merchants," said a St. Louis drummer, according to the Republic, of that city. "The trade for men, no less than for women, shows this improvement. Even as brief a period as ten years ago I sold most orders of coarse hip boots and shoes to our country customers. Now I have not a single call for this cheap, heavy quality of goods."

"Then I used to see buxom, red-faced country ladies come into the small towns along the railroads in coarse, heavy shoes, all twisted and warped out of shape, and buy more of the same kind of footwear, paying usually a maximum price of one dollar and fifty cents. It is different now, however. Young ladies of the rural districts at present come to town in neatly-fitting calf leather shoes made of the finest material. And they are dressed in other particulars better and more tastefully than were those I used to see a decade ago. But I can't say that there is the same bloom of robust health on their cheeks as characterized those who wore the 'stogy' shoes. Nor do they look so contented and happy. Maybe, after all, the improvement has been in the wrong direction."

A KNOTTY POINT.

The Law at Fault Concerning Pre-Nuptial Presents.

A novel point in the law of wedding-presents—if there be any law on the subject—was raised before a London magistrate by a well-dressed, middle-aged man. Can they be seized for rent? It has never been satisfactorily settled whether wedding-presents given before marriage can be reclaimed by the donor, should the expected ceremony be indefinitely postponed, for different magistrates have given different rulings on the subject. A man cannot get back a ring he has bestowed on his intended, but sometimes he has succeeded in recovering a piano or furniture. The gentleman who made the application had his questions written down, and was prepared to place on the same record the magistrate's answers; but Mr. Lushington declined to give advice on the subject, merely remarking that "it depended on what the wedding-presents were." Apparently the landlord saw nothing in them beyond mere portable property, and treated them as such. There is no poetry where rent is concerned.

Strict Formality.

During the battle of Lexington the bullets flew thick and fast. A ball struck Gen. Sterling Price's saddle, shattering it and turning the occupant half-way round in his seat. His son, who was near by, came up in haste and cried out: "Father, are you hurt?" "Gen. Price, if you please, sir?" Then, after a minute's pause: "Gen. Price can assure Col. Price that he is unharmed."

DANGEROUS NEIGHBORS.

New Domestic Pets Are Lost in the Land of the Ceylonese.

The island of Ceylon is sometimes referred to as the "Isle of Spices," but with all its abundance of flowers and fruits, it furnishes many a neighbor to the planter that he would gladly do without. Outing describes a visit from two such savage neighbors.

One Sunday afternoon a planter and his wife went out for a stroll, accompanied by a favorite Maltese terrier. They took a path leading to an elevated corner of the estate, partly inclosed with forest. Here they sat down on a log, and remained, enjoying the lovely view till the lengthening shadows warned them that it was time to return.

At that moment the lady noticed the dog, which had crossed over to the other side of a little ravine, and exclaimed: "Look at Gyp! What is the matter with her?"

The man turned and saw that the dog was crouching by a stump, apparently in abject terror.

There came a rustling in the underbrush, and with a spring as quick as light a magnificent leopard bounded out of the cover and picked up the dog in its mouth.

The great cat paused for a moment, looking around, switching its tail from side to side and growling in triumph. Then it strode into the jungle. As it did so a second leopard suddenly appeared, looking larger and fiercer than the first, and, catching sight of the spectators, followed its mate.

BEST ROYAL HOUSEKEEPER.

Empress of Austria Tests All Her Royal Competitors.

A person can eat, drink, sleep and be served better in the household of the empress of Austria than in any other in Europe, says the New York Recorder. The reason is that she is the best royal housekeeper in the world. She receives personally, reads and acts upon reports from cooks, butlers, keepers of the plate and keepers of the linen.

New methods of preparing or serving food are adopted only at her suggestion. Cooking devices which have become inconvenient or antiquated are abolished only at her suggestion. Changes in the personnel of the establishment are made for the most part, only in obedience to her orders.

The kitchen in which the food for the illustrious blood of Austria is cooked is a huge one, with all the arrangements at each end for preparing fish, fowl and fowl for the table. Fifty chickens can be cooked at once on one of the big, whirling spits.

The broiling and baking and frying occupy a small regiment of servants. Twenty-five male cooks spit, season and stuff the meats. As many women cooks prepare the vegetables, the puddings and the salads.

A dozen or more boys carry the birds, fish and joints from the kitchen to the carving room, where long lines of carriers slice everything laid before them.

A DIFFICULT FEAT.

One That the Wild Animal Trainer Can Barely Accomplish.

"The hardest thing to train a wild beast to do is to perform with a weak defenseless animal," remarked A. I. Hutchins, an old circus and menagerie hand, who has deserted the arena and ring for mercantile pursuits. "I remember once several years ago an effort being made to persuade a very docile lion to lie down with a lamb. The idea was certainly a good one, but it took several lambs and also several weeks before the lion, which was willing to jump through a burning hoop, sham death on being shot, etc., could be persuaded to allow a lamb to enter his den with impunity. Twice he killed a lamb in the presence of his trainer, and the second time he nearly killed the trainer, who rather recklessly tried to get away the carcass. Finally, the lion would tolerate a lamb in its den just as long as the keeper stood over it with an iron bar. But the effort was so evidently forced and the performance was so utterly lacking in smoothness and interest that it was abandoned after two or three attempts."

Healing Power of Music.

The idea that music possesses an actual healing power is about to be tested in London. The Guild of St. Cecilia is about to build or hire a large hall in which musicians specially trained to sing and play the very soft music, which alone should be administered to those whose nerves are weakened by illness, shall perform by day and night, telephones to connect this composite and continuous music room with certain wards of the chief London hospitals. Records and data of conditions and effects are to be kept and conclusions arrived at. Music on tap like this has its obvious advantages, chiefly that it can be promptly turned off. Otherwise the sick person who has groined in agony over the midnight thrumming of the piano in the next flat or the late banjo picking in the apartment below would set his face strongly against being the experimental victim.

The Mirror and Its Omens.

The Swedish girl who looks into her glass by candlelight risks the loss of her lover. A universal superstition which has found its way even to our own prosaic time and country forbids a bride to see herself in a mirror after her toilet is completed. In Wervle-shire and other parts of rural England it was long the custom to cover all the looking-glasses in a house of death lest some affrighted mortal should behold in one the pale and shrouded corpse standing by his side. Superstitions of a less ghostly character cluster around the mirror and are familiar to us all. To break one is everywhere an evil omen. "Seven years' trouble but no want" follow fast upon such a mishap in Yorkshire, while in Scotland the cracking of a looking-glass, like the falling of the doomed man's picture from the wall, is a presage of approaching death.
