NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS

Interesting Items From Various Points in the County, Reported by Our Staff of Correspondents.

CENTRAL.

I here relate you a few local news about our section.

The election passed off very quietly. Every ticket was counted as voted, which speaks well for the advance in our ability to vote correctly.

The weather is quite cold with about five inches of snow on top of the mountain.

Some few are hunting deer; among those who are said to have good luck was J. B. McHenry and his party from Benton. Well, the McHenry fellows most always have good luck. The Parvin Kile Hotel, located in the west branch of Fishingcreek, is headquarters for the hunters.

The hard times keeps C. E. Yorks quite busy handling the law for us fellows. In the suit of Frank Monroe and J. W. Perry it was adjourned for a further hearing. Mr. Perry giving bonds for his appearance.

This section is quite free from sickness and no one seems alarmed, as our resident physician can be relied on.

The tannery is running at Jamison City. Quite a number from Central have work at that place. The Pentecost Lumber Co., on the west branch, is also running on full time. This company employs quite a large number of hands.

Messrs. Hummer and Yorks have taken a lay-off to take their usual hunt for deer. They are located on Elk Run, the famous trout stream.

Some few have changed moved into other houses, and all seem busy getting ready for the winter.

LIGHT STREET.

Mrs. Thompson and daughter, sister and niece of J. M. Hulshizer, were called here on account of sickness of the deceased; having reached here on Friday evening and his death occurred on Sunday.

E. D. Hagenbuch accompanied Mrs. J. M. Hulshizer to New Jersey.

Mrs. Isaiah Bower and lady friend, of Berwick, spent Tuesday in town.

Mr. and Mrs. Fredrick, of Scranton, are stopping with the latter's father, John Eckroth.

Mrs. Moats, of Woodward, Centre County, is visiting Mrs. Lillie Reighard.

Miss Allie Kester of Millville organized a Young Women's Christian Temperance Union here on Sunday night last.

At this writing our friend John Eckroth is still on the decline, now being confined to a sick bed.

John Shew has so far recovered from a recent sickness as to be able to be out.

Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Ent returned from New York, where they were taking instructions on the McDowell drafting machine.

BENTON.

Cold weather prevails in this section at present.

Ira, J. B. and Pet McHenry were gunning on the mountains last week and killed two fine deer. They left Monday morning for an other hunt and when they return we expect to see as many more. If the deers are to be got, they generally get them, as they are classed in this section, as the bull dogs.

Dr. H. G. Colley, wife and son Fred of Lehman are visiting Jno. Heacock of this place.

Jamison City was well represented in Benton Saturday night. They do most of their trading at this place.

B. G. Keller is all smiles these times; it is a big boy, he has taken in a partner with him.

Orvil McHenry spent Sunday at Waller visiting his mother and sisters.

Alfred McHenry, our merchant is kept busy six days out of the week. He is our leading merchant at this place, and says he has not the time to talk business.

Any one in need of furniture give Ira McHenry a call. He has the largest stock on hand in the county north of Bloomsburg.

Rumors say J. G. McHenry of this place, expects to purchase the shoe factory at Orangeville.

Chas. Appleman expects to leave for Wilkes Barre in the near future, where he is going to be engaged painting ten dwelling houses.

Benton Milling Co. is doing a rushing business; their buckwheat flour seems to be superior to all others.

JERSEYTOWN.

Last Thursday morning made the people commence to think about getting their sleighs ready for use.

Mr. Harvey Henric made a trip to Bloomsburg on last Wednesday.

Pascal Eves, of Millville, gave this town a pleasant call on last Thursday evening. Nothing like the Jerseytown girls.

Our wide awake merchant, Dan' Laidacker and E. F. Welliver made a trip to Philadelphia last week.

Ottis M. Farnsworth and Wilber Runyan made a trip to Danville on last Wednesday afternoon.

It was quite a sight to see the Bloomsburg drummers rushing in town last Monday morning, showing their samples and taking orders such as was wanted in their line.

Mr. Harry and Miss Hannah Stevenson, of Hughesville, Pa., gave John Converse a visit on Sunday last.

Three young men of Millville spent Sunday at this place; that's right, come again, boys.

About 3 o'clock on last Wednesday afternoon death comes in our midst and removes from us our old citizen, A. K. Smith, after a long illness of typhoid fever. Mr. Smith has lived at this place for many years, and he will be missed by many. He was a noble and generous man. Funeral took place on Saturday forenoon and the remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at this place.

The Sufferings of Female Suffragists.

Western reports have it, now that females of their section have the right to vote, that they are too timid to fully enjoy the great privilege. Of 35,000 Chicago women who registered only about 8,000 mustered the courage to vote, and about 5,000 of these swore off for the future. We apprehend that to make female suffrage free from all suffering it will be necessary to give her special quarters or mark her booth "this apartment for ladies only," and then keep the men out with a club or something. Then by having special police to see that she gets out as sleek and clean as she gets in she may prove a great moral factor to her country while the baby squawls in its loneliness.

No matter how much silk was in the stockings they wore, or with what many flourish of female trumpets they registered, when it came to entering the crowd and voting they quailed. The polls, as polls generally are, were painted more or less brown with tobacco juice and they lacked all parlor-like appearance in the eyes of the ladies. Besides the judges and clerks were found to be more hilarious than sedate. Then just what to do with the ballots after they got them in the presence of a gaping and anxious crowd of political bums and rounders had a tendency to further confuse the sovereign power in the female grasp, and in consequence many were marked wrongly and after all their trouble, rejected. Under certain conditions female suffrage may yet straighten up things in this country; but the conditions don't seem to be here yet.

THE BURIAL OF A CZAR.

At the funeral of the Czar of Russia, on the 17th, inst., at Moscow, an immense procession followed the remains. The body was blessed in front of the Iberian Chapel and solemn mass was celebrated in the Cathedral of the Archangel Michael, where the public were given an opportunity to view the remains. Thousands were busy all night putting the city in mourning for the late Czar, the streets in the morning presenting the appearance of a festive rather than a funeral occasion, the only distinguishing feature being the heavy folds of black drapery arranged upon walls and pillars here and there. There was a great and conglomerate mass of individuals, comprising the peasantry, the gentry, the tourist and the soldier, the like of which had not been seen since the coronation of Alexander III, some ten years ago.

It is said that no less than 10,000 men worked all night to complete the mourning drapery, and about 1,000 men were employed in paving with cobblestones the streets over which the corpse was to be carried. About two and a half miles of such pavement was laid by the peasantry. And then to muffle the clatter and noise that would arise from passing over it, thick layers of sand was scattered all along. The entire route was thus easily distinguished by the pavement and drapery.

The train with the body arrived at 10:40 o'clock. The successor, Czar Nicholas II, was saluted as soon as he alighted. He was accompanied by the Grand Duke Sergius, a number of the higher clergy, the Civil Governor and the Commandant, members of the court, the chief nobility down to the third class, the Mayor of Moscow and many other subordinate generals and officers.

The procession being formed in groups, the generals acted as pallbearers and carried the coffin to the temporary chapel, where the metropolitan read a brief service. From here the remains were taken slowly and solemnly to the funeral car in waiting.

Everything moved like clock-work, the firing of a cannon being the signals given. It the first fire the 180 classified groups formed and took place in the column, the whole procession comprising fifteen different divisions and no doubt given place according to caste or rank of nobility. The line of procession being thus formed, another signal started its slow and solemn march, amid the tolling of a thousand bells in the famous city of Moscow. When the chapel was reached the clergy stepped out bearing the miraculous picture of the Virgin, and with which they blessed the body.

The members of the imperial family gathered between the gorgeous pillars at the foot of the coffin and listened to the reading of the solemn mass for the dead, the service closing with music.

The imperial family and their attendants then retired within the Kremlin, while those holding tickets were admitted to the cathedral, where the body laid in state. Here they passed around the dais slowly, taking a last look at the dead Czar's face. After the nobility and gentry came people of all sorts and grades in the eyes of society, who were kindly admitted in the supposed order of their rank and blueness of their blood.

The body was watched day and night by six staff officers, twelve subalterns, and two special guards at each door. The spiritual repose of the Czar is cared for through frequent masses at appointed hours, and everybody, now that he is dead, is welcomed to bid farewell to Alexander the III of Russia.

St. PETERSBURG, Nov. 13th, 1894. This city was heavily draped in mourning to day long before the body of the dead Czar arrived from Moscow. The entire population inspected the extensive decorations. The line of procession here was over four miles long. A strong detachment of sailors formed the guard of honor. Sixty pages, all holding candles, assembled at the depot and awaited the arrival of the funeral train. The hearse in waiting was draped with gold cloth and silver tassels. The top of the hearse was surmounted by the imperial crown and ancient gilt helmets. The procession was divided into three sections and thirteen divisions, the hearse leading the section to the Winter Palace where the body was laid in repose.

Clarkson's Opinion of Lady Voters.

Having studied the activity of women in the campaign, he is led to remark:

“The highest-minded man however jealous or sheltering he may be of his wife, mother or daughter as against any rude touch of the world, could not have found any objection to what occurred at the polls in Colorado.

“The women cast a large majority of the votes in Denver, and the presence of a single good woman at a polling-place made the men there as quiet and respectable as at a theatre or church, and, regardless of her rank or station, the American woman is as much of a queen at the polls as in the drawing room, and as much deference is paid her.”
