THEY WERE ALL THERE.

Why It Was a Lighthouse Keeper Did Not Get Restored.

When the president, Secretary Carlisle, Secretary Gresham and Capt. Evans were on one of their trips down the coast they happened to be near by where the Cedar Point Lighthouse burned down owing to the dereliction of the keeper who was absent from his post of duty.

"I want to know who wrote the letter recommending this man's dismissal," said the Congressman.

The polite secretary invited the member and friend to be seated and touched his bell. "I will send for a copy of the letter, and you shall see it for yourself," said he.

"I suppose," proceeded the Congressman, taking a seat, "that the dismissal was made on the report of some disreputable inspector who didn't know half the facts. I am going to see Capt. Evans about it and have the matter fixed."

By this time the letter-book was brought, and, placing it before the member, the secretary said: "You see, the letter is signed by Capt. Evans."

"Oh, Bob Evans signed it, did he?" Then reading the letter, he added, "It is just as I thought; he has based his recommendation on the report of an inspector. Give me a copy of that letter; I am going to see Capt. Evans about it."

"Certainly," replied the bland secretary. "I will have a copy prepared at once; but—er—I believe that Capt. Evans is personally advised of the facts in this case."

"Personally advised! What does he know about the matter except from this inspector's report?"

"Well, you see, it happened that Capt. Evans was at Cedar Point when the lighthouse was burned."

"Evans was there himself?"

"Yes; he was there at the time, on one of the lighthouse vessels, and, I think, he made some inquiry into the matter."

"Oh, well, if the captain was there, and has signed this letter, I suppose there is no use of my seeing him. Give me the copy, though, and I will go and see Carlisle."

"Certainly; of course the copy will be ready in a moment; but, I think, the secretary, too, knows about the matter, as he was also at the lighthouse at the time."

"Carlisle was at Cedar Point when the lighthouse was burned up?"

"Yes; he and Capt. Evans were there together."

"The devil they were. Well, then, there's no use of my seeing him. I'll have to go to my friend Gresham; he'll fix it for me. Let me have the copy all the same."

"Yes; to be sure; but—er—general—the fact is—that Secretary Gresham was there also."

"Do you mean to say that Carlisle and Gresham and Bob Evans were all at Cedar Point when the lighthouse burned up?"

"Yes; it just happened that they were all there."

"Well, I'll be d—d. This is very strange. I'll have to see the old man himself; I'll go to the President. Is that copy ready?"

"Yes; it has just come; here it is; but—perhaps I ought to say—you ought to know—that is to say, that the President probably knows about the case, as he was likewise at Cedar Point."

"The President was there? Good God! Well, Smith," turning to his man, "I guess your goose is cooked. We'll have to give it up."—Washington Star.

A Mean Revenge.

The man knocked at the door of a boarding house on Cass avenue and the landlady opened it.

"I presume you are the landlady?" he said, after saying "good morning."

"Why do you presume that?" she asked with a snap, for the visitor looked as if he might be some kind of an agent.

"A friend of mine, Mr. Smith, who used to board here, told me I'd recognize you as a lady of about fifty."

"She fairly gasped at this. 'Did he tell you that?' she inquired with suppressed emotion. 'He did, madam.' 'And you recognized me by that description?'"

"The visitor knew something about discretion being the better part of valor, having been an agent for a long time.

"I did not, madam," he responded. "It's a good thing you didn't," she said. "When I bounced that fellow Smith for not paying his bill for three months, he told me he would get even with me, and this is how he is doing it."

Then she bounced the visitor.—Detroit Free Press.

An Untimely Blow.

"I may as well tell you," said the brave swimmer, as he reached the side of the struggling girl, who was just going down for the third time, "that I have a wife and you cannot marry me as reward for saving your life."

For Those Who Think of Marrying.

A thoughtful waiter said to a young woman who was engaged to be married: "If you are going to marry a man for his looks, you mustn't be surprised when he gives you black ones;" and to the young man he said: "If you are of the opinion that marriage makes man and wife one, and that you are to be that one, send in your regrets at once."
