Georgia to make some financial speeches, in which he will tell his hearers why he lost faith in the efficacy of the tree coinage of silver and became an advocate of sound money. He has accepted invitations to deliver three speeches, but, as his mail was for some days before his departure from Washington filled with invitations to deliver speeches in other parts of the State, it is probable that he will make more than that while he is about it.

Secretary Lamont very seldom consents to being interviewed for publication-he is an old newspaper man, which accounts for his shunning notoriety-but he made an exception in order to deny the silly story about his western trip having been in the interest of a third term for President Cleveland. He said: "I was not hunting ghosts, though I am told some were about. My trip was purely a business one, and I had neither inclination nor opportunity to meddle in politics. About the only people I saw and talked with were the military and railroad people. The railroad men whom I met told me that the outlook was very favorable for great prosperity. They are about the only ones I had an opportunity to talk with on the subject, and I presume that they are about the best judges."

By the way, speaking of this third term business, which some republican editors seem disposed to make a standing nightmare out of, there is nothing in it. While an occasional democrat of prominence has expressed a willingness to support President Cleveland for a third term, no personal friend of his has ever encouraged such an idea, and it can be stated on excellent authority that he has never made a suggestion to any member of his cabinet that could be construed, even in the most indirect manner, to mean that he desired another nominaenjoy the President's confidence said be seriously discussed. I am satisfied that Mr. Cleveland would long ago circumstances accept another nomina tion had he not thought it to be entirely unnecessary to do so. You may between this and the holding of the democratic National Convention become evident that a serious attempt was being made to nominate him again. He is proud, as he has a right to be, of the three nominations given him by the democratic party, but if he has any ambition for a fourth nomination his closest associates have never discovered the slightest evi allow his name to go before another national convention.
