TYPESETTING BY SOUND.

THE TELEGRAPH AND THE LINO-TYPE HARNESSED TOGETHER.

PRESS DISPATCHES PUT INTO COLD TYPE JUST AS THEY ARE RE-CEIVED OVER THE TELE-GRAPH WIRE BY THE OPERATOR.

At the office of the Louisville Post there was recently demonstrated the feasibility of taking press dispatches directly from the wire and putting it into type on a Mergent-haler machine. The experiment was conducted by Boyle I. Boyle, manag-ing editor of the Louisville Post, and Richard Cogan, of a Western news association. A wire was run into the composing room of the Post Office. A giant telegraph sounder, placed within a resonator, was located at the height of the receiving operator's ear and close enough to him to avoid the slight noise of the machinery, says the Electrical Review. Then Mr. Cogan selected a number of press dispatches and sent them over the wire to Mr. Boyle, who took them on the linotype directly from the telegraph instru-

At first a speed of only fifteen words per minute was attempted, but it was at once apparent that the keybo ard of the liuotype was much swifter than this, and a much higher rate of speed could be maintained. Soon a maximum speed of fifty words per minute was attained and kept up. The mat-ter was sent in abbreviated form ("cut," as the operators say), so that the receiver on the linotype spelled it out in full and kept up with the sending operator.

The speed of the fastest telegraphers is seldom more than fifty words per minute, averaged on several hour's work; the speed of the fastest linotype operators is often 7500 ems : an average speed for the telegraph is twenty five words per minute, allowing for stoppages; the average for the linotype is 4500 ems per hour. So that it can be readily seen that the relative speed of the two are about the same, and with proper practice any intelligent telegraph operator should be able to "take" a report on the linotype. The keyboard and its attachments on the linotype are swifter than the typewriter, and it is thought that by introducing this machine directly to the receiving operator that the intermediate services of the typwriter can be dispensed with, and the "telegraph matter," given to the newspaper editors in the form of "proof" instead of "copy."

You must not say "teas" or "receptions" any more. The new word for all the smart crushes is "raout," which in former times was called "raout" in the best English society. THE BLOOMER PIONEER.

She Was Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Not Mrs.

"Yes, I was the first woman to wear the 'bloomer' costume, nearly half a century ago," said Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, to a New York reporter. wore it all the time—in the streets, the house and the office. It required a great deal of moral courage to do it, but I acquired the courage in time. The street boys made rhymes and sang them at me, and the papers published squibs about me, and the comedians in the theatres made fun of me. But I knew that the costume was a sensible one, and I kept on wearing it till I saw fit to drop it. Why did I drop it? For that best of woman's reasons-because it was ugly. The wisdom of the costume could not hide the fact that it was not becoming, and I got tired of it. It was the same sort of thing that Dr. Mary Walker has made famous since. There were trousers to the shoetops, a skirt, a frock coat, of Prince Albert shape, and a beaver hat, with feathers.

"The costume was pretty save for the trousers. That was the troublesome detail, and it always will be, I am Trousers are ugly things at the best of times, as we can see by com-paring the men of to-day with those of the Middle Ages, when they were trunks and hose. But you cannot expect women to go about the streets like a comic opera chorus.

"My cousin invented the 'bloomer' costume. She was Mrs. Elizabeth Smith Miller, daughter of Gerrit Smith, of Peterboro, N. Y. She designed the dress because she believed it would be more convenient and would give women more room to move about in than the fashionable gowns do. Mrs. Miller had the whole rig made in white satin, and she went in it to Washington, where she created a sensation. She was an earnest worker for woman's suffrage, and she thought that she could not do better than take the side of women in the matter of dress.

"What do I think of the bicycle dress of to-day? I think it will revolutionize not only woman's dress, but her life. It will do more for woman's suffrage than all that speechmaking ever did or will. It will do as much for the women up town as the typewriter has done for her sisters down town. At one time there were certain parts of the city down town where a wo-man could not go without being the subject of curious looks and uncomplimentary comments. They were business quarters, and women were considered to have no business down there. But to-day the typewriter, the bookkeeper and the other woman workers are as much at home down there as the men, and she is regarded as in her proper sphere. Everybody is used to seeing her, and she dominates the situ-

"I think the 'bloomers' are ugly, but they are ten times better than the long, sloppy dresses, going into puddles and mud, and sweeping up all sorts of unpleasantness. I do not think any decent woman will wear a long skirt

"The proper length for a walking skirt is to the shoe-tops. They will get there, too! As women get used to the bicycle dress, they will not con-sent to wear long skirts. Luther, who was the worst enemy of woman, said that the worst garb a woman could put on was wisdom. I say that the ugliest garb a woman can put on is the British Investments in "Americans." Human sentiment has its tides, like those of trade. People cannot or will not stay pessimistic long. For two weary years we have been hearing of nothing but loss and disaster; after such a prolonged strain trifles light as air are seized upon as strong tion of the hope for better prices in the near future, and the tide of sentiment turns. Our London friends since 1892 in a panic of fear have been sending back to us large amounts of bonds whose security and safety there could be no reasonable doubt. It was foolish, but the tide was running that way and nothing could stop it. Now that British sentiment is changing, these same English friends who would not hold "gilt-edged" bonds are huving millions of shares of American railways, a good part of which in the slang of Wall street are "cats and dogs." shares considered by us as almost worthless intrinsically and selfing at nominal prices, whose purchase no responsible American banker has recommended.

It is possible that this buying of lowpriced stuff-which has its humorous side in the light of recent historywill prove profitable as a speculation. Since the Baring Equidation, in 1890, capital has been accumulating in London and in continental cities awaiting investment. The owners are tired of holding it unemployed. Meanwhile the craze about gold-mining in Africa furnishes an illustration of what may happen. The English people have invest-ed more than $600,000,000 in African mining, on which the expected returns in 1895 will not exceed 2 per cent. So great has been the excitement, begun more than a year ago, that the description "Kaffir Circus" has been applied to the performances on the London Exchange. Nor is the excitement subsiding. On the contrary, there are signs of it spreading to France and Germany. If such a craze should seize the English people about cheap American railroad securities, the purchasers of our low-priced shares would reap a rich harvest. Of course accompanying such sales there have been large amounts of good bonds and stocks placed in London.-The Forum, New York.

An interesting problem in the transference of population is that of the re-moval of colonies from overpopulated districts of the West to the lesser peopled sections of some of the more northern of the South States. A colony of five thousand farmers from the Northwest and California are now settling in North Carolina, where they have desirable locations—this making three colonies of Westerners who have this spring settled there. They will engage raising early truck for Northern markets.

The old homestead of Jane Gray Swisshelm in Swissvale, Pa., is the Mecca of many visitors to Pittsburg. The house is redolent of hietoric as-sociations. One part of it was a blockhouse in early times and bore its share in the defense of the surrounding country against Bradddock. Near it are the ruins of an old mill to which the French soldiers went for meal from Fort Duquesne. It may not be remembered that Mrs. Swisshelm was the first woman engaged to report Wash-ington news for a daily newspaper. She was employed for that purpose by Horace Greely.
