

The Southern Negro.
 In the language of a southern writer the generation of negroes born since the war are just beginning to "feel their oats." A vast army of them in the south are without the habits of sustained industry and of self-restraint possessed by their fathers, educated in the school of slavery. They care nothing for the law and the officers of the law. They are constantly in conflict with these and with the exasperated public opinion of their vicinage. They are enemies of society, and in the interests of society should be placed where they can do the least harm. An orderly administration of the laws everywhere is the best safeguard that society can have, but our Afro-American fellow-citizens damage their cause when they persistently place themselves on the side of the criminal element of their race, in defiance of law and public opinion. To recognize the existence of this criminal element and "labor to lift them up morally and intellectually," as Mr. Scott suggests, would be a far more wise and judicious course to pursue. It is never safe to justify the existence of abuses of whatever sort; a manly recognition of them and an honest effort to correct them will always command respect of those whose respect is worth having. "The common negro" is a natural product of slavery and the reaction from slavery. He is in evidence in every southern community and in a few of the northern and western ones. He complicates the race problem. He makes difficult the pathway of the honest, respectable and ambitious members of his race. He is too often, it is true, made the standard by which his whole race is judged, but under the circumstances this is unavoidable. An honest admission that he exists and that he is to be dealt with just as the criminal members of other races of the population are will be of incalculable advantage to Afro-Americans and to society generally.

A SEVENTY-SEVEN-YEAR-OLD citizen of Great Falls, Wash., is undergoing a peculiar process of physical regeneration. About a year ago he contracted pneumonia, and his life was for some time despaired of, the doctors saying his right lung was hopelessly wasted. He recovered, however, but when just able to hobble around he fell and broke his thigh bone, and was confined to the hospital again for six months. Since leaving, however, his physical condition has improved remarkably. His lungs began to open up until they became almost as well as ever; his skin shed off and a new skin grew, and his hair and beard, which were snow white, are coming out a jet black. His limbs and muscles have limbered up, and he started a week or so since to take a herd of young horses across a long trail to market. He says if he continues to grow young he will get married again and grow up with the country.

THERE is scarcely a husband who, during the past four months, has not urged his wife to learn to ride a wheel. There is scarcely a husband of the lot who does not now regret that he so urged her. He has found that it has added to his nervous impairment, in the ratio of about fifty per cent., and, in addition thereto, he has caught the "husband neck." This strange malady is caused by the constant craning of the neck, generally to the left, to see if the wife of one's bosom is safe. Even after the husband has found that his wife has really become a skilled rider, the habit remains. He can no more help turning his head, at short intervals, than he can help imagining that all sorts of dire disasters are befalling her.

THERE is a dog owner in Philadelphia who tells a story concerning his canine companion that tries the belief of his friends, but he vouches for its truth. The dog is an intelligent looking animal of the shepherd variety, and is frisky and full of fun. The particular trait of which its master boasts is that when he wants the animal to stay in one place it is not necessary to tie him up. All that is needed is to fasten one end of the rope to a convenient post and give the other end to the dog to hold in his mouth. The patient animal will sit for hours in this way, and would no more run away than he would fly.

WHEN dogs, cats and other animals carried long distances on cars and steamers, sometimes confined in bags and baskets, can, without asking any questions, find their way home, and birds traveling thousands of miles come back year after year to the same nests, and carrier pigeons to their dovecoats, it is pretty sure that they know some things to a knowledge of which no human being has yet attained. There is a vast field of animal intelligence to be studied, and the more we study the more we shall be filled with wonder and admiration.

A WASHINGTON MARKET (N. Y.) butcher is known as "the sweetbread king," and does the largest business in that edible delicacy of any man in the country, his annual sales being about two hundred thousand pairs.

WORMS are playing havoc with the cotton throughout Mississippi and Louisiana. Requests for Paris green and London purple have been so numerous that the drug stores are unable to supply the demand.
