Finger Tip Brains.

Acuteness of Touch Among the Blind Explained.

It has been reported, states the Microscope, that the gray matter brain cells of perception have been dissected out of the finger tips of the blind. Standing point up beneath all the ridges so plainly seen with a magnifying glass on the skin of the inside of the finger ends are the so called corpuscles of Pacini, which are arranged in the exact semblance of the keys of a piano, and are said by Meissner to This Pacinian corpuscle, which contains within its lining membrances a nerve trunk, an artery and a vein, and thumb tips. A medical man recently assisted in an autopsy on a person blind from birth, and he sought to discover by scalpel and microscope the secret of the extraordinarily delicate touch the blind man had acquired during life. Sections perhaps a sixteenth of an inch thick were carefully sliced off the inner surfaces of the index and middle fingers of the right hand. Under a single nerve trunk and artery and vein filaments, dainty and minute nerve stant use the finger tips of the blind acquire this unusual development, with more and more perfect performance of function .- New York Mail and Express.

As a forage plant it may yield ten to twelve tons of fodder per acre, and when thinly sown in rows about a foot apart, a yield of fifty to ninety bushels of a yield of fifty to ninety bushels of seed may be obtained. The Maine State sounds a warning.

Ordinary barn-yard grass is a coarse annual, with stems two to four feet in length, appearing in mid-summer, in low, somewhat damp places or on cultivated grounds. The ordinary variety is a very troublesome weed. Certainly the seed of Panicum Crus Gallicum should be bought only of reliable dealers, who will be sure to furnish the seed of the Japanese variety. The mischief that would be wrought by sowing seed of ordinary barn-yard grass is self evident.

The presence of Ex-Senator Ingalls and Bob Fitzsimmons in Washington at the same time caused some wag to start a story that Ingalls had taken the job of press agent for the prize-fighter. Although he denies it, there are reasons for believing that Ingalls is after McKinley pie.

Senator Tillman says he intends to see that there is an investigation of the new sugar trust scandal. He gives his reasons in the following language : "The Senate cannot afford to let this matter rest where it is. We cannot ignore the charges that have been made. The principal thing for us to find out is what influences were back of the adoption of that schedule by the Finance committee. As far as speculation in sugar stock by Senators is concerned, I know of no reason why a Senator has not the same right to risk his money and gamble in stocks as other men, provided he does not do it on secret and advance information which is not accessible to the public, and provided it is not at a time when his vote in the Senate would influence the course of the market." Mr. Tillman says he will wait a reasonable time to allow some older Senator to offer a resolution providing for an investigation before doing so himself, but that the investigation will certainly be made, if persistency on his part will get a resolution ordering it adopted.

No greater farce was ever enacted in Washington than the imprisonment of Chapman, the sugar broker, which was begun this week. He is supposed to be in prison as a punishment, but there is mighty little punishment about it. He has a cosily fitted up bedroom and an office adjoining; his meals are prepared at a swell hotel, and he has a waiter from that hotel detailed to wait upon him. He receives callers and entertains them all the time, and can do about anything he could do in a hotel except to leave the jail. This is an injurious farce, too, because it increases the belief, already too prevalent, that there is one justice for the wealthy and quite first dose of Dr. Agnew's Heart Cure, another for the poor.

pomologists are striving for is to produce thornless and seedless fruits, and from the results already obtained it is not unlikely that the end will soon be realized.

Thorns are not in good standing among fruit growers, because they are constantly puncturing the best fruits, and, what is equally important, the skin of the pickers. The thorns and prickles of plants and trees weeks undoubtedly intended by nature to protect them from animals, but that is no reason why they should be continued for generation after generation on the cultivated varities. The gardener has no need for them, and, for that matter, the trees and shrubs have none either.

Our domesticated pears and apples were all derived from the thorny, wild varieties, and pomologists have succeeded in ridding them of these spikes and prickles by careful culture and selection. Oranges and lemons have not been cultivated in this country as successfully as pears and apples. and many of them are very thorny. The wild and sour orange trees of Florida are bristling with thorns, as is also the high-priced king orange, one of the best of the mandarins. The wild lemon trees of Florida are so thorny that growers question the advisability of gratting the fine La France lemons on them.

In Florida, however, the thorns of the orange and lemon trees have been greatly reduced by selecting buds from branches with the fewest thorns, and by continuing this process year after year the sharp spikes disappear. In California nearly all of the orange trees are thornless-not naturally, but as the result of cultivation and selection .- New York Journal.
