Of all the men who have figured in politics in this State, for years back, none will be missed less in his retirement from Democratic circles than will the Venango Congressman. During the years that he has been to the front and parading bimselt as a Democrat he has never been known to devote a minute of his time to contribute a dollar of his wealth, or to turn his hand or open his mouth for the party he professed allegiance to. He was content to accept the loaves and eat the fishes, and to glorify Sibley. Even the members who had been candidates on the same ticket with him refused to heed his appeals and after a week of campaigning, in the interest of the enemy and the betrayal of his party, he left for home without a single follower, or the political respect of any one.
