A PROPHETIC DREAM.

THERE was a man along here to-day," remarked Hiram, "who is arranging to secure the right of way for an electric road right past our farm." "What's that?" asked Uncle Abner, who had been dozing in his armchair, but now suddenly awakened.

"I say there was a man along here to-day trying to get a right of way for an electric road," repeated Hiram. "Wanted a right of way for an electric road, did he?" replied Uncle Abner. "That's what he said," said Hiram. "A real electric road," demanded Uncle Abner.

"I guess it was," said Hiram. "At least that is what I took it to be, and that is what he said was to be. One to carry freight and passengers." "It's all coming true!" repeated Uncle Abner, half to himself. "I might have known it."

"What's coming true?" demanded Hiram. "My dream," answered Uncle Abner. Then he asked: "Where's this road to run?" "Between Millville and Martinsburg," replied Hiram. "You know, there's a road runs out from the city as far as Millville now, and they want to extend it to Martinsburg this summer, and then next year they hope to push on to Clear Springs. You ought to have heard this fellow talk about it. He will be almost like bringing the city right to our doors. Why, Millville will only be two squares away, and Martinsburg will be just around the corner, so to speak."

"I know, I know," returned Uncle Abner. "I dreamed it all. We can run into town for the circus and get back in time to do the chores. I know all about it." "What was your dream?" "Want to hear it?" "Sure," said Hiram, and Hannah and Lizzie and Henry all nodded their heads.

Uncle Abner leaned back in his chair and half closed his eyes. "Well," he said, "I dreamed that there was a trolley car track on every road—cross-roads as well as highways." "There will be pretty soon," broke in Hiram. "Wait," cautioned Uncle Abner. "That wasn't all, by a good deal. I dreamed I was sitting here in this chair and Hannah was sitting over there where she is, and pretty soon you came in from the barn."

"Hannah," said Hiram, "has that new suit of clothes I ordered in town come out yet?" "Not yet," said Hannah. "Well," said Hiram, "that's a nice thing, isn't it? I ordered that suit of clothes before nine o'clock this morning, and here it is after three in the afternoon. I want it to wear to the theater to-night."

"What's that got to do with the trolley car?" interrupted Hiram. "Wait," said Uncle Abner again. "You fumed and fretted round for awhile, and finally you said: 'I wish you'd call up that clothing store and ask them what's the matter. They know my size.'" "Call 'em up!" broke in Hiram again. "Sure," answered Uncle Abner. "On the telephone, you know." Hiram gave a low whistle. "You must have been eating mince pie," he suggested.

"Just you hold your horses," protested Uncle Abner. "I'm not through yet." "Go on," said Hiram. "Well," Hannah answered that perhaps you'd better wait half an hour, because the 3:48 car hadn't been along yet, and they'd very likely come out on that with the laundry."

"With the—?" "Now, you keep still!" exclaimed Uncle Abner, angrily. "I'm the one who had this dream and I'm the one who's telling about it. She was expecting them with the laundry, of course, which was sent into town every Monday morning and came out again every Wednesday afternoon. And that's the way they came, too, according to my dream."

"Hiram drew a long breath. "Well, you're a good dreamer, all right," he said at last. "But that isn't all!" asserted Uncle Abner. "After you'd got your clothes I dreamed I heard you talking again, and you were asking Hannah what time the theater car came along, so's you could be dressed in time; and after that you wanted to know if she'd ordered the motor."

"The motor?" "Sure, I remember your very words. You said: 'Hannah, I've got those two trailers sidetracked in the barn loaded with hay, and I want to get them to market. If you ordered them to send out a motor when I told you to ought to have been along to-day to pick them up and haul them into town.'" "That's all right," answered Hannah. "You know you ordered a sofa, folding bed and half a dozen dining-room chairs sent out to-morrow, and I found it would be cheaper to have the motor that brings that car load out take back your hay, so I told them not to bother about sending one out to-day."

"Correct," said Hiram, "but there's that threshing machine that's got to go to Si Hawkins over on the Pikeville road. That isn't on the main line, so we'll have to have another motor car for that job, and when you order it tell them to send along an extra man to do the switching. I don't see why anyone wants to live away off on these side-track roads, anyway. It's an awful nuisance getting to them."

"Is that all?" asked Hiram, as Uncle Abner paused. "Hardly," was the answer. "Just as you were about ready to leave for the theater I dreamed Hannah said to you: 'Don't forget about Lizzie's party next Saturday evening. You can make the arrangements while you're in town to-night a good deal better than I can over the telephone.'" "All right," said Hiram. "What do you want me to do?"

"Well," said Hannah, "I think three observation cars will be enough, and you can tell them that the young people will probably take about a 20-mile ride and will decide for themselves at the time just where they'll go. Then Lizzie and I ought to have a car to make a few calls some day next week."

"I can't afford it," said Hiram. "Then Tollyver's wife has had a car with a man in livery to leave her cards for her twice in the last week," urged Hannah. "Oh, well, I'll order two men in livery," said Hiram, with some show of temper. "I did mean to have the tracks running into the barn fixed next week, but if you've got to spend a lot of money making calls I'll have to let it go for awhile. Say! but society is expensive! I tremble when I think of the trolley bill I'll have to pay when Lizzie is married."

"And then?" suggested Hiram. "Then the theater car came along, you took it and I woke up." "It was time," said Hiram; "and I think you'd better diet yourself and avoid rich food for a week or so. You're getting too far ahead of the rest of the world." "Oh, I don't know," answered Uncle Abner. "The world seems to be following after me pretty fast. The trolley man has been here, hasn't he?"—Chicago Post.

TWO POPULAR PASTIMES.

Bicycle Riding and Golf Have Gained the Greatest Hold in America.

The two forms of recreation which have taken the greatest hold upon the American public are bicycle riding and golf. Why these pastimes have attained so great a popularity in this country is not difficult to understand; and an analysis of the elements of their great success involves an enumeration of those elements which must be found in every sport which approaches the ideal, says the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

Wheeling and golfing are equally adapted to the pleasure of both men and women, and naturally bring them together for their outings. This insures the wheel and the golf club a place in thousands of homes from which they would otherwise be excluded. For many husbands will not allow themselves regular indulgence in a recreation which may not be shared by their wives, and when to the intrinsic interest of any recreation is added the zest of social intercourse between the two sexes its pleasures and attractions are multiplied.

That pastime which calls its participants into places of scenic beauty, and at the same time furnishes them with the exhilaration of interesting exercise, possesses a sure and a potent charm. No recreation possesses this characteristic in a greater degree than does golf.

DEMAND FOR BELGIAN HARES.

Numerous Shipments Are Now Being Made to Eastern Cities from the West.

Belgian hares are being shipped to the Chicago and New York markets in enormous numbers from the west. There are large numbers of rabbit farms in Nebraska, and Omaha commission men are beginning to reap a rich harvest from this traffic. A ready sale is found for the animals for shipment to all eastern cities, says a Chicago paper.

The income from some of these rabbit farms, started by children, has been large. At Columbus a boy started with a pair of rabbits and in one year cleared $300 and had left more than 200 rabbits. They breed six times a year and begin to propagate at the age of four months. Many of these little animals have escaped in Nebraska and Kansas and have already occasioned alarm among farmers for fear that they will increase so rapidly that they will become a menace to crops.

Belgian hares are offered for sale in all the markets around Omaha, and several of the big packers are arranging to pack the animals for foreign shipment. The flesh does not resemble that of the wild rabbit, but is very white and sweet.

OFF THE TRACK.—This means disaster and death when applied to a fast express train. It is equally serious when it refers to people whose blood is disordered and who consequently have pimples and sores, bad stomachs, deranged kidneys, weak nerves and that tired feeling. Hood's Sarsaparilla puts the wheels back on the track by making pure, rich blood and curing these troubles. Constipation is cured by Hood's Pills. 25c

In financial circles you will find sharpers even when the market is dull.

There have been poultry books printed costing fifteen dollars and more, but there never has been one at any price with more beautifully colored reproductions of poultry, than those found in Biggle Poultry Book, an announcement of which appears in another column. The paintings were made direct from best birds of the different breeds, and the coloring and characteristic shape of each breed are perfect. As for the text, there never was a book printed containing more practical, level-headed information. Its chapters include "Eggs for Hatching," "Hatching the Eggs," "Care of Chicks with Heat and Brooders," "The Successful Care of Incubators," "The Farmer's Flock," "The Village Hen," chapters on "Breeds," "Fattening and Marketing," and "Diseases and Remedies," with the old and new school methods of treatment. One man wrote the publishers that "The mottoes alone at each chapter heading were worth the cost of the book." Twenty thousand copies of this admirable work have been printed. The price is 50 cents, by mail; address the publishers, Wilmer Atkinson Co., Philadelphia.

When a man has money to burn, he can usually ignite it with poker chips.

The poet appears to have no writes that the editor is bound to respect. Literary Notes for August McClure's. "A Prisoner Among Filipinos" is the title of Lieut. Commander James C. Gillmore's account of his extraordinary experiences in the Philippines, which begins in the August "McClure's." Lieut. Gillmore was captured by savage tribes while out in a small boat with a scouting party on the East coast of Luzon. He had more than one narrow escape from death. For several months these men traveled hundreds of miles through the heart of Luzon, enduring unspeakable hardships, with no prospect of escape from an awful fate at the hands of bloodthirsty Tagals. The illustrations by W. K. Leigh, after the author's own sketches, are marvelously graphic. Since the appearance of the Jungle-Book animal stories have become popular, but it is doubtful whether any one ever tried to tell a story about a porcupine. In the August "McClure's," however, Mr. William Davenport Hulbert tells about a porcupine living in the woods of Michigan and describes his mischievous escapades, his adventures with human and brute foes, and the misfortune that befell him in his old age, as if he were a real human being. This article is illustrated with pictures from photographs by A. R. Dugmore. "An International Wheat Corner," by J. D. Whelpley, in August "McClure's," gives a somewhat startling revelation of a proposition made not long ago by the Russian government to the United States, whereby the two nations should control the wheat supply of the entire world and fix its price at a uniform rate which should never fluctuate. These details have never before been made public. Josiah Flynt and Francis Walton begin their "True Stories from the Under-World" in the August "McClure's" with "In the Matter of His Nibs." The chief characters in the story are a detective, several thieves and a New York police captain. The stories are illustrated by studies from actual types in the Rogues' Gallery.

The mid-summer fiction number of "McClure's Magazine" will contain contributions by Frank H. Spearman, Jack London, Ian Maclaren, E. S. Martin, and others, in addition to several special articles of unusual interest. The cover, by Louis Loeb, is one of the most attractive that this magazine has ever had. S. S. McClure Co., 141 East 25th Street, New York.
