doubt this assertion take your sewd make a round of visits in the neigh as I did one morning recently. Mrs. Jones, of the tricky husband, was the first one I called upon. Her home was becominely and artistically furnished; it and the air of material comforts; Mrs. greeted me in a gorgeously embrot She is a worldly woman ough the things she has found out arough some lawsuit in which her husband are proved a rascal have furrowed hard of cynicism and distrust in her face, hears above and beyond this exof material comfort and sounding self-satisfaction.

think just here Mrs. Jones saw in my tion as to what sort of an un business venture had taken Tom is that country, for she said, with a quick fish of comprehension: "I declare, Tom is the best fellow in the world to his family, grous, so considerate. He loves me have handsomer clothes than any other soman, and as for bills, he never fusses them them. Did I tell you he has just even Mabel a diamond necklace?"

You know, she has her diamond necklaces are sc or debutantes. "It is lovely," I said, "for her to have ech a generous father. Yes," agreed Mrs. Jones, complacently you a woman can stand a lot of therecomings in a man. She has to put up a least with some dreadful fault when she parries, but I think I could endure any thing better than selfishness and stinginess If a man is open-handed and generous to his family, often things can be forgiven. They will be human, you know."

Her hard lips gave a cold, comprehensive Then she looked down at ber clittering rings with a smile of cheerful 'Why," she went on, "there are some thongs a woman just can't endure. Look at Mary Smith, next door. Now, if 1 had a husband like Fred Smith, I'd have de seried him long ago. He is what peop's all high-toned in a way, but I don't call it orable for a man to live like the lilies of the field, to dress immaculately, and and every bit of the little income be has in his blessed self, leaving a wife to strug gle and skimp out an existence any way the can for herself and a lot of children That's not my idea of honor."

"Nor mine, either," I agreed. And then, ter a bit of mere chat, I betook myself sent door to see what Fred Smith's wife had to say about it. I found her darning beide a basket of stockings that must have seemed as hopeless as the sea did to the resel with the sieve. She smiled and offered me a cordial greeting. Her face was yorn and pinched, her gown out at elbows; the room was bare and comfortless. "I have just been over to Mrs. Jones',"

"She were a gorgeous kimona Tom brought her from Japan. Mrs. Smith's lips curled into a smile of "How can a woman accept anything from such a man?"

he seems to think he's all right," I said. Oh, that's a pretense"-confidently and wih some degree of satisfaction. an't be happy with him." "He has just given Mabel a diamond tecklace," I answered. "Well, I can't have any respect for either Mabel or her mother. Why"—her eyes blazed and I knew she was in earnest-"I on understand a woman's enduring a lot in a man, all women must endure some thing more or less, but to have him an un mitigated sharper, like Tom Jones—that midurance is beyond me."

"You think you'd get a divorce?" I "Certainly," she answered. "All the money in the world would not keep me tied to a man like that. Anything but that." Her eyes fell on the basket of bulging stockings and her face flushed a bit. she said, rather haughtily, as if I had spoken, "men are not perfect. Some have been accustomed to more indulgence than others; one has to concede in mar rage to one's husband's peculiarities. He have flagrant faults, but if he is up right, man to man, in his business dealings "by, that fact makes up for all foibles."

gasped. I knew it would be this way. and yet it had turned out so absurdly true that the experiment gave an amused and also a guilty feeling. I felt as if I had lived long with both these women through their illogether different marital experiences, and as if I could see and understand the Point of view of each. "What infinite sol-tes we find," I thought to myself, "in the demestic miseries of our neighbors."

My theory became a rock of adamant then I talked with the woman whose hus band gambled most of the time and wa herer at home, day or night. She spoke with peculiar bitterness of a meddling man in the house, and simply wouldn't stand it. The woman whose husband loafed at home and hossed said: give her anything on earth but a gadding husband; that no matter how much a man fussed around his own freside, a wife felt much more comfortable to have him there. She knew then he was not getting in mischief somewhere else. To cap the climax, on the very day these tonversations occurred I called upon Maria, by washerwoman, and found her with her ad tled up.

"Pa hit 'er," said one of the black imps

o the washpot. Shet yo mouf, Jinny," interrupted the man. Then turning to me: V'An' s'pose did," she added, defensively. "Some tien folks dey get all-fired mad all ter enct, but dat ain't no sign dey gwine to grumpy all de time dat he seem lak gittin' ligion. He sulk an' sulk an' neber give out a pleasant word. Desc chillan's pa, he git savigrous, but most de time he fekin' and makin' us all laugh. Den, my Gawd, ye know, miss, if a man don't git at yer an' wanter kill yer now an den hit's er sure sign he ain' got no sho huff lub fer yer." All of which goes to rove that the wife in hard luck cares very happily married woman can usually find alegadant solace in the shortcomings of mashands not her own.—Washington Star.

Ol. Burn-Murdoch, who is now in South Africa in command of the "Kalser's Own," owes his life to his short stature. When the square was broken at Abu Klea, Col. Burn-Murdoch was standing by the side of two other officers, both taller than he. The ourushing dervishes fired a volley, and, unhapply, both of his tall neighbors fell, shot through the head, while Col. Burn-Murdoch was hit in the helmet.
