HAVE FASTIDIOUS HABITS.

Even Decapitation Does Not Preven Certain Insects from Making a Grand Final Toilet.

It has often been noticed that there are no animals which are more dainty and fastidious in their personal habits than insects, the extreme pains which the common housefly takes in attending to its toilet being a good example of this racial characteristic. The disgovery has now been made that there are certain insects which have such a respect for Mrs. Grundy, and are endowed with such an innate love of neatpess and order, that not even death, or rather decapitation, can prevent them from making one grand final toilet. which is clearly designed to give them a sedate and respectable appearance after death.

Dr. Ballion, a skilled entomologist. has discovered this remarkable fact says the New York Herald. "During one of my recent horseback rides," he says, "I frequently caught one of those large flies which annoy cattle and horses so much, and I promptly got rid of it by crushing its head. One day instead of throwing the mutilated insect away, I placed it on the back of my hand and indolently watched it. For some seconds the insect remained motionless, but then, to my unbounded surprise, it moved its front legs forward to the place where the head should have been, and, after it had subbed them nervously together, apparently in anguish, it began to brush its body and to smooth its wings with its hind legs. Under the gentle pressure of these limbs the body gradually became extended and the extremity curved, while the wings gradually changed their natural position and left the upper part of the body exposed Meanwhile the hind legs continued to brush each other from time to time Naturally I watched this extraordin ary sight with great interest, and, in order to see the finale, I took the insect into my study, where it lived an entire day, spending the time at the ungrateful task of making its own funeral
