HON. E. M. TEWESBURY.

Tribute to the Memory of the Late Ex-Representative.

Edward Marvin Tewksbury, one of Columbia county's leading citizens, died at his home near Catawissa on January 15, from the effects of a paraistic stroke, with which he was prostrated about one week before the time of his death. His health had been poor for several years past, and repeated attacks of pneumonia and paralysis had so weakened his constitution that he was unable to rally from what proved to be his death

The funeral services were held to McIntyre MethodistEpiscopai Church. which is located on Mr. Tewksbury's fatm and in full view of his late home, on Friday, January 18th, and were in charge of the pastor, Rev. The pastor then read and gave a plain, practical exposition of the 13th chapter of I. Corinthians, which was a favorite chapter of the deceased, and which, he declared to his pastor a short time before his death, was the one the most expressive of his religion, and from which he desired his funeral discourse preached. Mr. McKelvey spoke both eloquently and forcibly of his long and loyal service to the church he loved, of his many acts of benevolence and charity, of his interest in education, and of his public service to his county and state.

As in Alice of Old Vincennes." he selects his native State, Indiana, for a background, though some of as "Shakespeare Springs," eighteen picturesque New Orleans and during a trip on the lovely, languid waters of Bayou Teche. Three vivid characters in the story compel more than a word in passing, while even the ical disability, which incapacitated Breyton, a New York milionaire, who yearns for "something different" makes a bicycle trip through the West. When he reaches the little town of Hawford, Indiana, he found what fate had in store for him. No girl has yet made a lasting impression on the fine young fellow, who is a bit of a poet, and when he meets Rosslynde Banderet his heart is ready for the germ of love. This is unfortunate for the girl is engaged to Alfred Rayle, an improverished artist, a cripple, whose divine eyes and marvelous magnetism make him a rival not to be lightly considered. The author's skill in dealing with the situ Montour county had a population an active part. He was elected to his magnificent. He gives free reign to plot which must be read, it cannot be guessed.

General Charles King's West Point story (third in the series of College Tales now running through the "'New' Lippincott) i entitled "The Code of the Corps." Genera King says, "I attach especial value to this story at this time." By which he evidently means that it bears closely on the recent investigations into hazing at West Point.

is a rattling good story besides. Other short fiction of the month is cantributed by Louise Betts Edwards, whose "At the Gates of Mercy." is a very human story of a wife's readiness to forgive when she is certain she would be forgiven the
