Notice to Liquor Sellers.

On January 20th Judge Little filed the following: "Before licenses are granted the present session, we have a request to make of all licensees to vend intoxicating liquors, and that is, that they abstain from selling or furnishing, either directly or indirectly, to persons who have become so addicted to the use of intoxicants that it has become a disease with them, and who have tried to extricate themselves from the power of the disease by taking what is called the Keeley Cure.

There should be no sales of intoxicating liquors to any such. It will be regarded hereafter as good reason, upon petition presented to this Court, for a rule to issue to show cause why the license of the person so selling or furnishing should not be revoked.

When a licensee has received notice from the wife or child, or any person authorized under the Act of Assembly to give notice, not to sell to husband or father or member of the family any intoxicating drink, and such notice afterward is followed up by another notice withdrawing the prohibition of the former notice, the second notice should have no effect whatever upon you.
