Most Perfect Establishment of the Kind in the World-Four Hundred Thoroughbreds Under One Roof.

[Special Berlin Letter.] MPEROR WILLIAM has reason to be proud of his horses and equipages. There are courts which maintain a larger number of animals, but in point of quality the German stables stand at the head. The royal family of Prussia has from time immemorial, encouraged the breeding of fine horses, and rumor has it that the present ruler is carrying his love for fine horseflesh almost to excess.

The imperial stable at Berlin is a marvel of architectural beauty and eleverness of interior arrangement. It is located in the center of the city. not far from the palace, and ornamented with pillars, columns and sculptures of rare artistic merit. At both ends of the magnificent front are fountains-one representing Prometheus, straining every muscle to defend himself against the eagle which is attacking him; the other Perseus and Andromeda, showing the hero in his battle with the dragons. and back of him Andromeda with Pegasus. Beautiful groups, picturing the training of the horse for purposes of war, lend added magnificence to the rich gallery at the top of the building.

The stable usually houses 400 of the Potsdam riding school, and Herr Nestler, equerry to his majesty. To this number of remounts are added seven coach horses and three sadanimals are bought in open market, of gala equipages, for outriders and

The famous state carriage, used only for coronation purposes, forms the conter of this unique and unparalleled collection of vehicles. to a particular place. The same rule prevails in the harness rooms, which, by the way, contain some notable specimens of artistic work. The harness of the horse driven by the emperor in his dog cart is decorated with mountings of solid gold. Some of the back harness is plated with gold, but most of it has quadruple silver plate. The most valuable article in the collection is a harness for a saddle horse presented to Emperor William by the sultan of Turkey. A sumber of valuable saddles, gifts to his majesty from the horses, which are raised on the royal rulers of Russia, Morocco, Persia, Siam, stud farms, located mostly in East | Japan and China are ornamented with Prussia. Plinzner, chief bers. conservative estimate places the value of these unique presentation saddles at $2,000,000. The livery halls are equally interesting. They give the visitor an insight into the etiquette of dle horses for the emperor's private court courtesies. There are liveries use. Should more be needed, the for ordinary drives, for the coachmen

The stables are under the supervision of officials called "wagon masters," who are, without exception, veteran sergeants of cavairy. There are ten of these officials-two at Potsdam and six at Berlin. The ninth supervises the repairing of coaches, and the tenth has charge of the harness rooms. Every man in the huge establishment is characterized by spotless cleanliness. The horses have night. The general color for blankets and court coaches is brown, for the royal animals and carriages it is blue. The blankets are perfectly suade his imperial brother to invest plain, the only ornamentation being heavily in American stock. W with a crown above the letter.

Beside the horses belonging to members of the royal family the stable at Pottsdam houses several hundred others, for use by foreign guests, the imperial suite and officials. Each horse is exercised dally; in the summer time in the open, in winter in the riding schools attached to the stables. The ventilation of the royal stables at Berlin is as perfect as science can make it; and the building itself is a marvel of modern iron construction. By simply touching a button a child can open the entire glass roof of the main stable hall and thus change the air in the twinkling of an eye. The prevailing color is pure white and the llumination comes from electric lights placed around the wall under the roof. Every year a certain number of the royal horses is sold to the public. Some are disposed of because they are slightly "off color," others because they are no longer needed or have developed some petty vice. They are eagerly sought after by would-be aristocrats who are willing to pay high prices for animals which have once been the emperor's, although his majesty may never have laid his eyes upon them after the first general inspection. It is somewhat surprising that Emperor William, who is by no means narrow minded in things of this sort has not introduced an American strain among his horses. The animals he has are, of course, fine and of distinguished ancestry, but experts in horse flesh claim that in general appearance they do not compare favorably with the pure-bred Kentucky coach horses. It is said that Prince Henry, during his separate blankets for day and for recent visit to the United States, was impressed with some of the turnouts he saw in New York and Chicago, and it is barely possible that he may per-
