By CLARA AUGUSTA.

H, YES, we moved the first of June. the house where we lived, because the | tens." pot closet was at least two sizes smaller they both wanted the same man, and the world.

Mrs. Green lives in the neighborhood, and she has kept Nency stirred up for 15 years. If Mrs. Green gets a new bonnet, Nancy gets a hat. If Nancy has a fresh table-cloth, Mrs. Green has a new set of napkins. If Mrs. Green washes four sheets on Monday, Nancy washes six the following Monday. And vice versa. Yes, always vice versa.

Mrs. Green has a lawn and a backyard big enough for a hen-coop. Nancy rowed that she'd have a lawn, too, and a back-yard sufficient for two hen-coops. She wanted an attic. She wanted a view of the park. She wanted to be where she could see the reservoir pond. She wanted back stairs. She wanted double parlors. She wanted three windows in the kitchen. In fact, she wanted so many things that we had to move. If ever you've moved, you know what

For four days we eat on the head of a flour barrel, and our food was mostly baker's stuff.

We had a loaf of sponge cake on the table so many times that it seemed like an old friend. I nearly shed tears when Nancy proposed breaking it up and converting it into pudding. "Silas," said Nancy, the day before we were to be loaded up, "there's the cat to be disposed of. It ain't lucky to move a cat, and besides a cat won't stay in a new place unless you grease its feet with butter and keep it down cellar for at least a week. And with butter 33 cents a pound, and strong'at that, I don't feel justified in wasting it greasing cat's feet."

"Good land, Naney," said I, "I never could kill a cat! Especially Priscilla. Why, she's been with us ten years, and she's like a human. You can't expect me to kill her, Nancy?" the partner of my bosom, with empha-"If I couldn't kill a cat I'd-I'dput my head in soak, and see if it wouldn't limber up my brains!"

feeling a great wave of generosity sweep over me. "I'll go down town and see about the coal, and you can fix her while I'm gone."

air of majestic dignity, "don't talk like woman's sphere. What did I marry you for? Was it that I might kill your eats for you, and-

"It's yours," said I; "it came from your relations over to Four Corners, and you got it to catch your mice,

"It's no cat of mine!" said Nancy, deeldedly. "You go right out borrow Stacy's gun and shoot it while its eating milk. Shooting is the most humane way, they say, to kill a cat," "Good gracious, Nancy!" said I. "I for Nancy." havent' fired a gun since 1867-4th of July, and she burst and blowed me into the middle of next week, and set a fiend in human shape she must be!" Mendon's barn afire." "Well, you ain't going to use that gun," said Nancy, calmly. "Stacy's gun is all right. It was in the war of the revolution. You go right out now and get it, and have the business over. When a thing's to be done, I believe in doing it." When Nancy sets her foot down, there is serious disturbance in the domesticatmosphere. So, very reluctant- marked with his blood. ly, I must confess, I went over to Stacy's and borrowed his gun. "Be eareful of her," said Stacy, "she then again she's so ticklish about her trigger that she's liable to go off any minute without warning. You've got to be considerable sarcumspect with

So I took the gun and proceeded to be "sarcumspect" with it. I laid it carefully on the top of the wood pile and called to Nancy to bring on the cat and put it on the fence so that I could take sight at it.

Nancy got the cat, but somehow Priscilla seemed to scent mischief, and she declined to remain to be sighted at. Then I resolved to shoot her on the wing, and as she was clawing up over Neighbor Jones' "short part," I seized the gun, and before I could take aim the thing went off with a crash that would have waked a dead man, if he hadn't been dead so long that there wasn't enough of him to wake. When the smoke cleared away I found myself lying on my back in the heap of coal ashes at my back door, and the eat was sitting on a soap box, washing her feet and attending to other details of her toilet. There were two guns now, instead of one, and Jones' kitchen window had three broken panes of glass to attest to my skill in taking aim. Nancy had got behind the water barrel and crouched down. She said afterward that she had done it so as not to distract my attention.

"Well, now," said Nancy, "the fact of it is that cat's got to die! She needn't think she's going to put folks to all this trouble and live! I'll put her in a bag, Silas, and you can get on your wheel and take her out Springville way and drop her in the river. I guess that'll settle her. And we can go right on with our moving."

"It don't seem just right, Nancy," remarked L. "Priscilla's been a bang up nice cat, and a faithful friend. She's cought our rats and mice, and purred to us winter evenings, and been glad to see us at any time in the day. That's prore than you can say of most of your dear friends. She's shared our crust and eat up the leavings of the steak that otherwise would have been wasted. and she's never seemed to lay it up Nancy she got dissatisfied with against us when we drowned her kit-

"There'd have been 19 dozen of 'em than Mrs. Green's. She and Mrs. if we hadn't drowned 'em!" said Nancy, Green are rivals. They have been rivals "and you don't want to go to getting all their lives. When they were girls sentimental over any messes of drowned kittens. You just go and unil he had to marry the Widow Bent in up that box of crockery, and tie up self-defense. He said he felt that with the feather beds, and put the burlap the widow at the helm he could defy over the parlor set, and take down the spare chamber curtain fixings, and then you'll have plenty of time to attend to your cat. It'll be better to go along toward evening. Cats don't mind being out nights, and it'll seem kinder natural to Priscilla to start out at sunset.

So it befell that as the shades of evening were gathering I mounted my wheel, with Priscilla in a bag dangling from the handle bars, and sped out in the direction of the suburbs. I was glad it was dusk. A man feels mean when he is going to drown a cat.

I hadn't gone 20 rods before I met "Hello!" said he, "what you got in your bag?" "Cat." says L "Good gracions," says he, "you ain't never going to give your cat away.

It's bad luck to give a cat away when you're going to move!" "The next person I encountered was Mrs. Green. She was returning from a meeting of the sewing society, and stopped me. "Good evening, Mr. Barker," said she. "Hear you are going to move! How's Nancy? Hope it'll agree with her where you are going. She don't look over and above pert lately. And she's getting awfulgray! What you got in your

"I've got a cat." said I, beginning to feel savage enough to do for all the cats in the country, "and I'm going to "Kill it," eried Mrs. Green. "Good land, Mr. Barker! I don't see how you dare! It's a sure sign of poverty and death to kill a cat!"

I wheeled on; by this time it was quite dark, and I was close to the river. I left my wheel in a clump of bushes "Don't be a fool, Silas Barker," said and untied Priscilla's bag in hot haste from the handles of my machine. Then with my wriggling burden I crept stealthily toward the river. I suppose I had a legal right to drown my cat, "You can kill her, Nancy," said I, but somehow I felt like a criminal in a dime novel.

I was going to give Priscilla a stupendous send off, and had lifted her high in the air for that purpose, when "Silas Barker," said my wife, with an she emitted a yell that fairly curdled my blood, and simultaneously an iron a fool! Killing cats is outside of a hand fell on my shoulder and a stern voice said:

"No, you don't do it! I've got you safe this time. I've been watching for you. You've got a dead body in that bag, and I arrest you!"

"Let me alone." said I, "I ain't a-doing anything, and-"

"Good Lord!" cried the officer, it's

"Of course it's alive," said I, "or else I shouldn't be here with it. And I shouldn't be here anyway, if it wasn't

"Great Scott!" cried the officer, "then its mother is concerned in it! What "Well," said 1, "Nancy is considerable of a tartar when she gets roused

The officer took his knife and cut the bag. "It's fortunate I was in time," said he, and then the cat broke up the seene. You should have seen her. She gave utterance to on ear-piercing whatever she wants has to be done, or "M-I-E-O-W," clawed her way across the officers face and left her tracks

"The-er-er-dickens!" said heonly he didn't phrase it that way-as he wiped the blood from his manly kicks, and she's apt to miss fire, and lineaments, "why in the name of common sense didn't you tell me it was a blasted cat that you had in your

"You didn't give me time," said I. The cat had disappeared in the bushes, and the policeman walked away in disgust. I went after my wheel, and found that some scamp had taken advantage of my absence and made off with it. I may add that though having been repeatedly invited to return it, and "no questions asked," he has not yet done so.

I walked home sadly, avoiding Nancy's questioning. I gave her to understand that I had traded the wheel. The next morning Priscilla sat on our bed-room window, placidly licking her fore-foot.

"Heavens and earth, Silas!" cried Nancy, "there's that cat been and resurrected herself, and looks just as peart as new!"

"Nancy." said I, "I've got a few words to say, and it won't be necessary to say 'em over again at any future time. Where I go, that cat goes. Where she moves I move. Where I live and move and have my being so does she there move and have her being. It's bad luck to lose a cat, and bad luck to kill a cat, and bad luck to give one away, and I'll be for everlastingly tantoasted if I ever part with Priscilla!"

There are occasions when Nancy does not dispute me. This was one of Oh, yes, we moved. Priscilla went with us, and Nancy says she is so glad that I did not succeed in drowning her, for she weighs two pounds more than Mrs. Green's cat, and there is going to be a cat show in town next week, with prizes for the heaviest cats .-People's Home Magazine.
