When the Republican speakers tell of the deficits of the Treasury during the Cleveland Administration, quote the following to them from the Congressional Record, of March 26, 1897, page 371, in which General Wheeler said:

"For Republicans to attempt, as they do, to hold President Cleveland and the Democratic party responsible for the present condition of the Treasury is a gross outrage and wrong.

"They depleted the Treasury, and when they saw deficiencies and ruin staring them in the face, they "Governor of Commonwealth and their face value. dition.

A fatal wreck occurred on the Pennsylvania Railroad near Milton early Saturday morning, resulting in the death of James Wheeland of Harrisburg, passenger engineer, and Edward Stringer of Sunbury, conductor on the freight train. Albert Shaffer, the passenger treman, also of Harrisburg, was seriously, if not fatally injured.

Word of the terrible collision was sent to Superintendent Preston at Williamsport, and he secured a special train and went to the scene, ariving there after the bodies of the dead men and injured fireman had was being so rapidly dissipated. To stave off the disaster they had brought upon the country they in 1802 a groan from Wheeland, but he was dead when reached at 3 o'clock. One arm was torn off. Conductor Stringer's body was terribly cut and from appearances he had been standing between freight cars when caught. Both bodies were taken to Sunbury. The investigation resulted in finding that near the Milton station passenger train No. o crashed into the rear of second section of freight No. 99, which had been left partly on a siding and partly on the main track, while the engine went up the track. Not expecting the track to be blockaded, the engineer of the passenger was running on good time when the terrific crash came. The first two passenger coaches were reduced to fragments, the engine, which ran over the ties and raked the freight cars on the siding, was demolished, and the two cars into which it plunged were also torn to kindling wood. Two baggage cars went over the bank, and in one Baggage Master Peter Phillips had a wonderful escape from injury. The rear six passenger coaches remained on the track and none of the assengers were hurt. Tracks were torn up three hundred feet, and trains had to be transferred to the reading road at Montgomery to prevent a serious delay of traffic. James Wheeland, the dead engineer, was formerly a resident of Sunbury and was a son of the late Benjamin Wheeland, himself an engineer on the P. & E. division. He had resided at Harrisburg for three years. He was 51 years of age, and is survived by his wife and three children, Fireman Shaffer's home is in Sur-Pennsylvania Railroad offices here Sunday night was that he still lives but his condition is unchanged.
